CASTRO IS EXPELLED.

Ignominiously Ousted from Island of Martinique by French Governor.

Protesting to the last that he was seriously ill, and hissing curses upon the French and United States governments, Cipriano Castro, once dictator of Venezuela, was carried, half clad, on a stretcher through the streets from his hotel in Fort de France, Martinique, to the steamship Versailles, a distance of more than a mile, Saturday evening and thrown aboard the steamer, which immediately pulled away from the dock and will not touch land until she ties up at St. Nazaire, France.

Official notice was served on Castro Saturday morning of the decision of the French government that he must leave the island within nine hours from the receipt of such notice and that the commissary of police at Fort de France had been charged with the execution of the order. The ex-President was furious. Calming himself, he declared to the chief of police that the state of his health was such as to make it impossible for him to leave his bed.

The government thereupon called in Dr. Bouvier, who examined him for one hour, from 11:15 to 12:15. The doctor was accompanied by the commissary of police. The doctor declared that the former President of Venezuela was sufficiently strong to travel, and that he could take the French steamship Versailles, due there the same afternoon.

Castro protested. He declared that he suffered from intolerable pains in the abdomen and the kidneys; that he was without funds to meet his traveling expenses from Fort de France, his money being deposited elsewhere than in Martinique, and that he could not embark on the Versailles. Castro demanded sufficient delay in order to make it possible for him to leave for Santa Cruz de Teneriffe, in the Canary Islands. The Canaries are Spanish territory.

All of his protests were ignored, and he strove all day to find some excuse for remaining which would satisfy the colonial government.

DEATH TAKES HITCHCOCK.

Former Secretary of the Interior Expires in Capital.

Former Secretary of the Interior Ethan Allen Hitchcock died at his home in Washington early Friday. Mr. Hitchcock had been ill for some time, and his death had been expected for several days.

Ethan Allen Hitchcock was born in Mobile, Ala., Sept. 19, 1825. He attended private schools in Nashville, Tenn., and then entered a military academy in New Haven, Conn., graduating in 1855. He moved to St. Louis, Mo., and engaged in mercantile business until 1860, when he went to China to enter the commission house of Olyphant & Co., of which firm he became a partner in 1866.

He retired from business in 1872 and spent two years in Europe. He returned to the United States in 1874 and was president of several mining and railroad companies. In 1897-8 he was Minister to Russia and was made the first Ambassador to that country in 1898-9. He was appointed Secretary of the Interior by President McKinley Dec. 21, 1898, and reappointed May 5, 1901, and remained by request of President Roosevelt and was reappointed by him March 6, 1905. He resigned March 4, 1907.

Work of Congress

A bill to provide for the taking of the thirteenth and subsequent censuses was reported to the Senate Thursday. Several resolutions calling on the Secretaries of State, Agriculture and of Commerce and Labor for information concerning duties on sugar were adopted. Because of the numerous committee amendments to the Payne tariff bill the House was compelled to sit until late in the evening in order to insure action on the various paragraphs coming within the scope of the special rule adopted the previous Monday before the final vote is taken. At one time the Republicans were caught napping and an amendment by Mr. Clark of Missouri was adopted fixing the rate of duty on wire of the No. 16 gauge at three-quarters of a cent per pound but this was thrown out later. Fearing that he might not meet with such success again, Chairman Payne took his Republican colleagues to task for absenting themselves from the chamber and appealed to them to remain in their seats. This was done, with the result that in all the committee amendments he was sustained.

During nearly five hours Friday the bill to provide for the thirteenth and subsequent censuses was under discussion in the Senate. The measure had been amended since its original passage by Congress in the last session, when it was vetoed by President Roosevelt because of provisions allowing Senators and Representatives practically to select employes of the census for appointment. These features of the bill called forth a general discussion in the Senate on the subject of civil service reform and the present operation of the law was denounced by several Senators. As amended by the committee the bill placed apopintments in the census under the Civil Service Commission. The Payne tariff bill yas passed by the House by a vote of 217 to 161, after three weeks of consederation. One Republican, Austin (Tenn.), voted against the measure and four Democrats, all from Louisiana, Broussard, Estopinal, Pujo and Wickliffe, voted for it. An attempt by the minority leader, Champ Clark, to recommit the bill with instructions failed. A resolution was adopted that until further orders sessions be held only on Mondays and Thursdays.

-:—:-

The bill to provide for the taking of the next census was passed by the Senate Saturday in a form which, it is understood, will meet the views of the President regarding appointments for census work under regulations by the Civil Service Commission. Efforts by some Senators to allow these appointments to be made upon recommendation of Senators and Representatives without examination received only slight support. The interesting feature was a speech by Mr. Bailey, who said it was reported that if the bill as passed did not provide for appointments under the civil service the President would veto it, and added that if any such "threat" were made it would stir up severe criticism of the President. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The tariff bill was reported Monday by Mr. Aldrich from the Committee on Finance. Senator Daniel led Democratic criticism of the reporting of the bill to the Senate without affording the Democratic members an opportunity to inspect it. Senator Aldrich replied that to have proceeded otherwise would have entailed long delay, and reminded the members of the minority that the Republican majority alone would be held responsible for the tariff legislation to be enacted by this Congress. A message from the House asking for the return of the bill reached the Senate too late for action. The House was in session two hours and fifteen minutes. The first action taken was the adoption of a resolution calling upon the Senate for a return of the Payne tariff bill the next Thursday in order that it might be corrected so as to include products of petroleum in the free list. During the confusion incident to the passage of the bill Friday it was believed that this provision was embodied in it, but it developed that such was not the case, although it clearly was the intention to include these products along with crude and refined petroleum. The House authorized its enrolling clerk to make the correction, and he can make the change within a few minutes. It will therefore cause no delay in tariff legislation. There was much opposition to two resolutions, one to appoint several janitors and the other to appropriate for the expenses of the House incident to the extra session. The first was defeated by being laid on the table, and the second was adopted only after Mr. Macon of Arkansas had forced a roll call on a point of no quorum. After sending the census bill to conference the House adjourned until Thursday.

A Race for a Wife

BY

HAWLEY SMART

"Well—what next?" inquired Rose; "there must be no ultimate chance of my losing two thousand pounds, mind."

"Certainly not. All I mean, at present, is to drive Coriander back in the betting as far as I can. When the news of your proceedings arrives, which I shall take good care to disseminate at once, I flatter myself we shall have got him at twenty to one, or thereabouts, for 'The Guineas.' We must then be guided by what terms you make with Pearman."

"I think I follow you, Silky. And now each to his avocation, and good-night."

"Good-night," laughed Dallison, as he followed Grenville to the door. "If ever Sam Pearman was in a biggish hole, he is just now. Mind, you've a clever man against you, though; so, do your work thoroughly. Never forget your stake."

"No. I'm not likely to, if you knew all."

"Got his measles pretty bad, apparently," observed the astute host, to himself, as Gren's footsteps died away down the staircase. "Hope his success there really does depend, as he says, on this business coming off all right; else, when it's a regular case of 'spoons,' never a soul, ever I knew, could be counted on in a business way—or any other way for the matter of that. It is risky! with a confederate in this state. I believe I'm a fool to trust him! That idiot, Jem Durfey, lost me a pony last year at Lord's—crack bowler of his eleven—and blest if they hadn't to play with ten men because he was seeing some chit of a cousin off at Paddington Station. Wonder why they do it! Never was spoons myself but once, and"—and despite his tirade, Dallison sat down and mused for more than an hour over that bygone flirtation of eight years ago. He might be cynical about all that sort of thing now, yet there was a woman still living who could make his pulses leap, should she meet him. It is a fact that, in some cases, women retain their sway years after they are not only unconscious of it, but have almost forgotten their admirer. It is true we also sometimes see the converse of this, when a woman would fain pick up the dropped stitches of a bygone love affair, but the male creature has freed himself from the yoke.

CHAPTER XIX.

The early train on Thursday morning saw Grenville Rose, accompanied by Mr. Nightjar, solicitor, junior partner of the firm of Hawk, Sparrowbill and Co., on his way to Slantover, the nearest railway station to Mannersley, from which it was distant about four miles. Having arrived at the latter place, and ascertained that Pearman was at home, Grenville sent in his card, and a request to see that gentleman for a few minutes, on business of importance. Now, it so happened, that though Rose had a thorough knowledge of Sam Pearman, the other knew nothing whatever of him. He had never encountered him personally, except to exchange that sentence or two after the Xminster ball. I don't know whether even then he had identified him; but of a surety that scene had pretty well faded from his memory, especially as regarded the personality of the other actor therein. It was as an entire stranger that he received the young barrister.

"I must apologize for troubling you, Mr. Pearman; but I am here as the representative of Mr. Harold Denison."

"You could not have come with better credentials, Mr. Rose. Charmed to see both you and your friend;" he glanced at the cards in his hands. "Mr. Nightjar, I think? Will you take some lunch now, or after we have had our little palaver?"

"Nothing, thanks; our time is precious, and we will detain you as briefly as maybe. You are, of course, aware that there is a death fine on Mannersley; or, to speak more intelligibly, that the owner of Glinn has a right of heriot over your manor on the death of any holder thereof?"

"A right of heriot!" muttered Pearman. "No, I never heard of such claim; and I think my father died in complete ignorance of any such right."

Though far from suspecting what was about to take place, Sam Pearman knew enough of law to understand this expression.

"You had better read that deed, Nightjar. Such right exists, and has been always exercised; generally compromised as a fine—a course we propose to adopt in the present instance."

The solicitor laughed, and opened, first a somewhat musty parchment, and then a document consisting of some two or three sheets of foolscap. "I will be as short as I can, Mr. Pearman, but the story is a little intricate to follow. I must premise that Mannersley was by no means originally part of the Glinn property. It seems to have been granted by the Abbot of Xminster to one Hugh Wilson, yeoman, for service rendered, conditional upon his bearing arms for the abbey, and being ever ready to do service under the banner of Sir James Denison of Glinn, the then lay lord and champion of the abbey. He further lay under the right of heriot; in the first place, to the monks of Xminster, who were entitled to claim three beasts upon the death of Hugh Wilson, or any one of his descendants holding Mannersley, as an acknowledgment of the fealty they owed to the abbey; in the second place, of one beast to the lords of Glinn, as a similar acknowledgment to the secular representative of the abbey. But the monks of Xminster were swept away in the Reformation under Henry VIII., and of course that right of heriot disappeared. Still the masters of Glinn continued to exercise their claim upon every occasion (or rather over two hundred years, at the expiration of which time, in consequence of the decay of the Wilson family, Mannersley fell, by purchase, into their hands, where it remained till sold to Mr. Pearman twelve years ago. The curious thing is, this right of heriot still exists; the owner of Glinn is still entitled to demand whatever beast he may choose upon the death of an owner thereof, and the successor can but submit to the claim. Do you follow me, Mr. Pearman?"

"Pretty well, I thenk. May I ask when was this right of heriot last enforced, and in what shape?"

"In 1734 Stephen Denison, Esq., of Glinn, received the sum of £25 in lieu of the right of heriot on the death of Matthew Wilson. That was the last case. It was his heir and successor that sold it to the Denisons—that being Stephen, before mentioned."

"Well, gentlemen," rejoined Pearman, "of course I am not quite prepared as yet to acknowledge this right—I must consult my solicitors first on the subject. Still, it looks plausible enough. I am afraid," said he, laughing, "money don't go quite so far as in Matthew Wilson's day. What, may I ask, do you assess me at?"

"Ten thousand pounds," replied Grenville Rose, quietly taking up the parable, as had been agreed between himself and his coadjutor beforehand.

"Ten thousand! Why, you're mad!" But there was no laugh now in his rejoinder. His quick intelligence gathered at a glance what a desperate position he was in; and, moreover, that the opposite side were pretty well aware of it.

"We're certainly not mad. I don't think we are foolish. I don't pretend to know much about these things myself, but the veriest tyro knows the first favorite for the Two Thousand, ten days before the race, is worth a big sum. Mr. Denison is in difficulties; money is an object to him. We give you the option of paying £10,000 fine or letting us make what we can out of Coriander. I fancy there will be plenty of people to bid for him, either one way or the other—I mean either to try and win with him, or to take very good care he don't."

Sam Pearman's turf training stood him in good stead. He had learned how to lose. He swallowed the ferocious execration that rose to his lips. "You will allow me to look at that deed?" he inquired; "and, of course, you cannot expect an answer till I have had time to communicate with my solicitors."

"Certainly," returned Grenville; "and your solicitors may also peruse it at the offices of Messrs. Hawk, Sparrowbills and Co. I tell you fairly we have had counsel's opinion upon it, and there is no doubt the right of heriot still exists. We mean to make the most we can out of it, and either take Coriander or a £10,000 equivalent."

Sam Pearman ran his eye rapidly over that old deed, which stated, after some technicalities: "And whereas Hugh Wilson, yeoman, did render good and secret service last time Ralph Eversley did lay claim most sacrilegious and outrageous on lands appertaining to us, abbot and chapter of Xminster, in the year of our Lord 1456, we do hereby grant to him and his body's heirs the fee-simple of the manor of Mannersley, in perpetuity, on the right of heriot of three beasts, to be delivered as token of fealty to us the said abbot and chapter of Xminster; with further right of heriot on the part of Sir James Denison of Glinn, and his heirs, to claim one beast in acknowledgment of allegiance to him as lay-baron and secular leader of the retainers of Xminster Abbey. The above acknowledgments of fealty and allegiance to be paid on the death of the then holder by his successor and heir male.—Signed, Edmund Gervoise, Abbot of Xminster, March 10th, 1456."

"All very well!" said Pearman; "but if this is all you have to go upon, you can scarcely expect me to pay much attention to the claim, more especially when fixed at such a preposterous figure."

"No, of course not; we never thought you would. Serve the writ of seizure, Nightjar, and then I think we need intrude on Mr. Pearman no longer."

"Two questions, please, before you go," replied the owner of Mannersley, as he accepted a neat legal document from the solicitor. "First, time is an object, at all events to me, in this case. Have you any objection to say whose opinion you have taken on that obsolete parchment?"

"Not in the least. Rumford's. Refer your solicitors to him."

"Good man; getting a little old, perhaps, but still safe. Liable to mistakes, as they all are, of course."

"We consider him good enough. Anything more?"

"Well, yes; are you aware of my peculiar relations with Mr. Denison's family just now?"

"Perfectly; and equally so with the causes which led to that result."

"You are traveling rather out of the record, sir," rejoined Pearman. "I will see Mr. Denison on the subject myself to-morrow."

"Certainly, you will find him at home; but permit me to say that I consider I have expounded his views pretty accurately, so far."

"Perhaps so; but I've known people change their views. Might I ask are you related to the family in any way?"

"I am Mr. Denison's nephew, and have the honor to wish you good-morning."

Pearman bowed, and rang the bell.

"Well, Nightjar," said Grenville, when they got outside, "so far so good; we've done all we can; to-morrow will be the real tug of war. You go back to town with the deed. Dallison will be waiting for you; tell him all that has passed, and that he shall hear from me, as agreed upon, the minute I hear anything definite. Meanwhile, good-by; I'm off to Glinn. Yes, I turn off here; it's not three miles across the fields."

I suppose it was a case of animal magnetism, but it certainly was odd that Maude should have selected that for her afternoon stroll. Nevertheless, it is a fact that as Grenville Rose jumped over the stile at the corner of Edgerton Firs he found that young lady seated on a grassy bank on the other side, with Dan couched at her feet—one of those coincidences that I presume has happened to most of us in our time, and sincerely do I pity the few whose want of luck and lack of observation have debarred them such sunshiny moments.

"Well, Gren," she inquired, as she rose to her feet, "have you overthrown my ogre? Am I a free girl again?"

"I don't know, darling—the great battle comes off to-morrow; but I think I can promise you shall never marry Pearman."

"Don't talk nonsense; you know I never would, now. Before you came down it was different. I was weak, and foolish, and miserable. That story is all over, and I'm forgiven—at least, I thought so;" and Maude looked shyly but archly into her lover's face.

Grenville behaved after the manner of young men generally when so circumstanced—those quiet footpaths over the fields have a deal to answer for—and what "Don't, please, Gren!" meant, I must leave to the discrimination of the reader, merely remarking, Grenville Rose either decided it meant nothing, or could not have heard it.

"But do you think you can put things a bit right for papa?" inquired Maude, when she at last extricated herself.

"I hope so; but we must wait till to-morrow to know for certain."

THE WORD "WINTER."

Said to Have Originally Indicated Wetness, Not Coldness.

There is a prevailing impression that there is something in the word "winter" that signifies cold, and the season is usually associated with the idea of low temperature, but where the word originated there was little of winter as we understand it, while there was a great deal of moisture at the time the earth was nearest to the sun, so that it is not the temperature but the atmospheric condition that has given us the word.

The word "winter," as we use it, is found with but slight modifications in all the branches of the Aryan languages, for the idea of wetness associated with the season was given to it before the Aryan family was divided.

If we go to the root of the word we find "wad," with the signification of to well, to wash out, to moisten or make wet. Our Aryan ancestors used that root to apply to all conditions of moisture, and many words besides winter have grown out of it, wet and water being among them.

This root "wad" is in the Sanskrit as "udan," water. Anglo-Saxon has "waeter," and in Latin we have "unda," wave, from which we get our "inundate."

Our Danish and Swedish cousins changed the "w" into a "v," and have "vinter." In Icelandic it is "vetir," and the old high German has "wintar," and it is "winter" in German. These four words are all from the Teutonic base "wata," which means wet. So it has been moisture that has been indicated from the birth of the root on which all of the different words in a dozen languages have grown.—New York Herald.

CURIOUS FLORIDA HERB.

Red Plant Which Feeds Upon Ants and Other Insects.

Almost everybody knows there are such things as insectivorous or carnivorous plants, but it is doubtful if many know we have any such plants growing right here in Southern Florida. Nevertheless there is a plant, or rather herb, growing here which is really insectivorous.

It is likely that on account of its being extremely small it has escaped attention. In fact, it seems to have been overlooked by the botanists also, as we are unable to find it classed among the sensitive plants.

This is an annual herb, and the entire plant, including the flowers, is of a deep rich red color. It rarely reaches a height of more than three inches and is never so broad. The leaves are spatulate when undisturbed and present many small fibrillae and secrete at their tips a tenacious fluid which is capable of holding the very small insects, such as ants and the like, upon which it feeds. When any of these get lodged in the fluid and disturb these fibrillae the leaves slowly acquire a deep cut shape and sometimes curl completely up over their victim. When they have absorbed the insect they slowly recover their original shape, leaving only the skeleton of the insect remaining.

These plants grow on the very low, flat, poor and sandy lands. They appear in the late winter and early spring months. — Punta Gorda (Fla.) Herald.

False Teeth for Dogs.

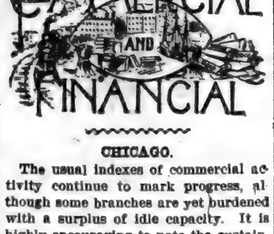
News comes from London that many dentists there have established "parlors" for the treatment of dogs, and that the patronage of the owners of "show dogs" has made the innovation a profitable one. A defective tooth may lose the prize to a dog otherwise perfect as to "points," and it is now a common practice with fanciers to send their pets to the dentist as regularly as wise parents send their children. Single new teeth cost from $4 to $5 each, while as much as $135 is paid for a full set for a beloved old canine member of a household.

Modern Table of Value.

"Now, children," commanded the austere instructor in advanced arithmetic, "you will recite in unison the table of values."

Thereupon the pupils repeated in chorus:

"Ten mills make a trust,
"Ten trusts make a combine,
"Ten combines make a merger,
"Ten mergers make a magnate,
"Ten magnates make the money."



CHICAGO.

The usual indexes of commercial activity continue to mark progress, although some branches are yet burdened with a surplus of idle capacity. It is highly encouraging to note the sustained rise in payments reported through the banks, together with the absence of heavy defaults in the failure record.

While erratic weather has prevailed Easter trade exhibits a gratifying aggregate in the leading retail lines, the absorption being exceptionally good in apparel, millinery, footwear, novelties and household wares.

High prices for some necessaries have not obstructed the increasing purchasing power, and stocks of seasonable merchandise undergo the normal reduction here and at interior points.

Demands entered by the wholesale branches make a fair showing, reorders being frequent for light weight textiles, clothing and fancy goods, and the forward bookings disclose gain over this time last year for autumn and winter staples, selections being more extended against tariff contingencies.

Near-by visiting buyers again appeared in the markets in large numbers for sorting up needs to be promptly shipped. Road salesmen send in cheering advices from the West, the outlook being regarded quite hopeful.

Mercantile collections are prompt on country bills, and less complaint is heard as to city settlements. Money is yet favorable in cost to borrowers, and this creates more disposition among buyers to secure the best discounts for cash purchases.

Further investment of capital is seen in improvements for business purposes, while the market for real estate and permits for construction denote extending enterprise here and at various places within the Chicago trade territory.

Bank clearings, $254,340,884, exceed those of corresponding week in 1908 by 18 per cent, and compare with $236,080,138 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number twenty-one, against twenty-one last week, twenty-nine in 1908 and eleven in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Trade, crop and industrial reports are still very irregular, but the underlying tone of business generally is slightly more optimistic. All present or future favorable occurrences, however, cannot disguise the fact that some lines of industry are still very much depressed; that the first crop report of the year—that made by the government of winter wheat—is a poor one, indicating a short crop; that buying is still hampered in some sections by unfavorable weather or by the reduced purchasing power of the public, and caution and conservatism still govern commercial operations to a large degree.

Easter trade at retail is classed as fair to good in most parts of the West, fair at the East, but below expectations at the South, and rather poor in Texas, where drought conditions hold back buying demand. Some slight expansion is noted in filling in orders by jobbers, but trade in this line is distinctively of a between-seasons character. In wholesale lines there are indications of more confidence in buying for fall.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with April 8 were 227, against 204 last week, 254 in the like week of 1908, 194 in 1907, 161 in 1906 and 196 in 1905. Canadian failures number 38, which compares with 23 last week and 28 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

SOLDIERS OF SULTAN START A REVOLUTION

Two Battalions in Constantinople Surround the Parliament Building.

DEMAND OFFICIALS GET OUT.

Panic Rules Turkish Capital and People Shut Shops—Mutiny Due to Young Turk Movement.

Serious disturbances of a revolutionary character have broken out in Constantinople. The situation is grave. The mutinous troops made demonstration against the building of the Turkish parliament. Panic has seized the people of Constantinople, and all through the city shops were hurriedly closed. The cabinet resigned and it is reported that Kiamil Pasha, the former grand vizier, has been charged with the formation of a new ministry.

The present grand vizier of Turkey is Hilmi Pasha. He was appointed Feb. 14 in succession to Kiamil Pasha. Hilmi formerly was minister of the interior, and before holding this office he served as inspector general of Macedonia. Ali Riza Pasha is minister of war and marine, and is grand master of artillery.

The changes in the cabinet in February showed the absolute control of the political situation by the Young Turk party, or committee of union and progress, which virtually imposed on the Sultan a ministry of its own nominees. The committee publicly repudiated any intention to overthrow the Sultan or to establish a military dictatorship, but the crisis did not promise well for the stability of the throne or the success of parliamentary government. It has been a question how the moderate elements of the empire would regard this assumption of absolute power by an irresponsible committee.

Two battalions of troops quartered in the ministry of war marched out headed by their officers, and went by way of Divan and John streets to the Mosque of St. Sophia, from which point they surrounded the building of parliament. They demanded the dismissal of the grand vizier, the president of the chamber and the minister of war.

WILD TRAGEDY IN AURORA, ILL.

Man Armed with Bombs, Shotgun and Revolvers Spreads Terror.

John Anderson, of Aurora, Ill., shot and killed Mrs. John McVicker, wounded Mrs. John Belford, and then committed suicide in the latter's home in Aurora at 7:30 a. m. Thursday. Armed with two revolvers, a shotgun and a pair of home-made bombs the man created a reign of terror through the district as he savagely started out on a rampage to "clean out" his neighbors, whom he accused of gossiping about him. His first victim, Mrs. Mcvicker, was eating breakfast with her husband when Anderson entered their dining room. With two revolvers he fired at the man and wife, one bullet piercing the woman's heart, the other merely singeing the man's hair. Then he hastened to the home of Mrs. Belford. He wounded the woman with a shotgun, firing the bullets through a door. Then he went into a room in the Belford house and blew the top of his own head off his body, sinking down beside the groping figure of Mrs. Belford's blind and aged mother.

CHARGED WITH FAKE MARRIAGE

Crippled Daughter of Indiana Ex-Mayor Accuses Minister.

Miss Bunn Clark, daughter of former Mayor Hale Clark and one of the society leaders of Washington, charged through friends the other day that she had been made the victim of a fake marriage by Rev. E. E. Davidson, pastor of the First Christian Church of that city, and numerous conferences between mutual friends and the minister have been held in a vain effort to have the marriage ratified publicly, but without avail, the minister saying he did not marry her and will not. Miss Clark is about 30 years of age. She has been a cripple nearly all her life, having to resort to the use of crutches. She is a member of a number of women's clubs and takes an active interest in all society affairs. The story, as told by friends of the Clark family, is to the effect that last December Rev. Mr. Davidson was in St. Louis on a visit. Miss Clark told her parents that she was going to Vincennes for a short visit, but instead of going to that place she went to St. Louis, where she met the minister. She says he at once proposed a marriage contract, telling her, so she asserts, that as he was a minister of the gospel, no other minister was needed.

FIND TEACHER'S WILL VALID.

Daughter of Prof. Hodgin Will Receive Only Life Interest.

After deliberating three hours, the jury in the case of Mrs. Laura Fleming against the Dickinson Trust Company, administrator, to prevent the probating of the will of Cyrus W. Hodgin, returned a verdict for the defense in Richmond, finding that the contested will is a valid instrument. The effort to prove that Hodgin was of unsound mind fell flat, the jury evidently pinning its faith to the testimony of Earlham College professors and others closely associated with Hodgin to the effect that even during his last illness his mind seemed clear. The estate, which includes a large farm in Dalton Township, will remain in charge of the Dickinson Trust Company, in trust for Mrs. Fleming, the daughter of Hodgin. At her death it will go to her children.

ACCUSES THREE OF MURDER.

Wife Says Husband and Others Shared Life Insurance.

That her own husband, Frank Rice, his sister, Mrs. Albert Taylor, and Dr. L. M. Stroud, brought about the death of Albert Taylor at Terrell, Texas, Jan. 8, 1905, is charged by Mrs. Ida Rice in an affidavit filed in her suit for divorce in Evansville. She alleges that an insurance company paid $5,000 on the death of Taylor, and that this money was divided among those she accuses. She alleges death was due to poison injected hypodermically. After the death, the Rices, Mrs. Taylor and Taylor's mother, moved back to Indiana, their original home. Mrs. Rice charges that her husband compelled her to write to Dr. Stroud and threaten him with exposure unless he sent her $100.

MEMORIAL DAY, MAY 29.

G. A. R. Committee of Indiana Decides on That Date.

Saturday, May 29, will be observed in Indiana as Memorial Day, according to a decision reached in a meeting of the G. A. R. committee, held at the State House. The day set apart by Congress for the observance falls on Sunday this year and because it is an easier matter to have the school children collect flowers for the observance on Saturday than on Monday, it was decided in favor of the former date. The general orders from Henry M. Nevius, commander-in-chief of the G. A. R., will not be followed in this respect. The orders recommend that Monday be observed, but leave the date a matter of choice.

BOYS ENGAGE IN DUEL.

Fifteen-Year-Old Youngsters Shoot at Each Other.

Riley Webb and Willie Haskett indulged in a duel with 22-caliber rifles while out hunting on the farm of Haskett's father, near Aroma. The boys, who are only 15 years of age, had a disagreement over their marksmanship and Webb whipped his companion. Haskett grabbed his gun as soon as he could get away, ran a short distance, and, turning, opened fire. Webb was quick on the trigger, and the boys were soon shooting at each other in true border style. Only one of the many bullets took effect and that lodged in the fleshy part of Webb's left fore arm.

MINOR STATE ITEMS.

Thomas Hite and Samuel Mertzbaugh of Ligonier, both old soldiers, were killed by a passenger train.

Samuel Teague died in Wabash as the result of burns inflicted by the explosion of coal oil. He poured oil from a can on the fire and the explosion wrecked a house and inflicted fatal burns upon himself.

Madison Shockley, 72 years old, died at the State prison in Michigan City. He was sent up from Randolph County August 29, 1906, to serve from one to fourteen years for grand larceny. This was his sixth term in the State prison.

While playing "wild west" with five companions, in Linton, Clifford Wolford, 15 years old, was shot and killed by Loren Hamilton, 18 years old. Hamilton then tried to commit suicide, but was prevented by the other boys, who took his rifle away from him.

Conrad Sperka, a young electrician, died suddenly in an electric bath of his own devising in Indianapolis. He had arranged that the water in his bathtub could be charged with electricity. Sperka evidently turned on a heavier current than that to which he was accustomed.

FRED B LEIGHTY
PUBLISHER.

Editorially.

The Delaware peach crop and Virginia strawberry crop have failed again. It begins to look as if the poor man would have little to eat but bread and very little of that with wheat at $1.28 a bushel.

Baseballitis is again rampant in the land. A dignified commissioner of the District of Columbia was snapshotted by a local newspaper during the first game in Washington as he lay prone on his stomach on the roof of the grandstand rooting like mad for his favorites.

There is a disposition in some quarters to believe that the policy of President Taft differs radically from that of his predecessor Mr. Roosevelt, that Mr. Taft will not carry out the Roosevelt policies and in fact he and his advisers in the cabinet will soon institute radical deviations from what have long been known as the "Roosevelt policies." So far has this impression gained ground that already one or more magazine articles in which it is sought to demonstrate the truth of the proposition are in course of preparation. This view, however, is due to a wholly superficial observation and to failure to distinguish between motives and methods. In his methods Mr. Taft is unquestionably decidedly different from Mr. Roosevelt. It could hardly be otherwise in view of the difference in training of the two men, to say nothing of the vast difference in character. A lawyer from the time he left college, and a judge on the bench for nine years, Mr. Taft naturally pursues lawyer-like and even judicial methods. He will progress more cautiously and at times his pains taking efforts to possess himself of all the facts before making a decision, may strain the patience of his admirers. But we venture to assert without fear of successful contradiction that time will demonstrate the aims and motives of the two men are singularly alike and we are disposed to believe, as did Mr. Roosevelt while still President, that in his slow but sure way President Taft will accomplish quite as much as his predecessor.

The Senate committee has practically completed its labors on its substitute for the Payne tariff bill and we venture to believe that the country generally will commend the measure of the upper house as a material improvement over that of the House of Representatives. There are a few increases in the Senate bill, but in the main the revision of Senator Aldrich and his colleagues has been downward. The widely criticised increase of the duty on gloves and hosiery has been removed and the Dingley rates, which were quite heavy enough have been restored. There is a material increase in the duty on wines and champagnes, especially the latter, and this item alone is expected to bring the Treasury an increase of revenue of not less than $3,000,000; and certainly the revenues of the country could be raised from no better source than the pockets of those more or less affected members of society who feel they must serve champagne at their entertainments or must "blow themselves," for this extravagant and wholly unsatisfactory beveridge in hotels and public places. A duty has been placed on iron ore, but it is a small one, only 40 cents a ton, and the other items in the steel schedule have been adjusted accordingly. The lumber tax is left at $1 a thousand feet, which is where the House placed it and where it seems likely to stay, despite the powerful and disgruntled lumber lobby which has haunted the Capitol ever since the tariff bill was taken up. Cocoa, which the House taxed three cents a pound, the Senate restores to the free list on the ground that it is a breakfastable necessity to many people. Altogether, the Senate substitute is a moderate and reasonable bill and while it will be made the subject of severe criticism by those who do not believe in the doctrine of protection by tariff duties, even these must admit that as the production of those wedded to the protective system it is a commendable piece of work.

Biggle on Rats

FROM FARM JOURNAL

My topic this month is rats. Of all farm crops this is the one that never fails. At least, Elmwood has always succeeded in obtaining a good yield, and I have never heard any of my neighbors complain that they have not rats enough. They are always complaining about something but not about this.

The rat is really a remarkable creature. It is quite ancient, and it has always seemed to me that Noah must have been imposed upon by this enterprising little animal, that is, too many slipped into the Ark,—they have been so plentiful ever since.

I know of no part of the world where it does not exist. Doubtless Homer, when he wrote his poems, must have had rats all around him, in the garret and cellar. They went into the Red sea with Pharaoh, but got through; Daniel found them in the den with the lions, and Jonah, no doubt had their company all the time he was with the whale. They were most likely squeaking around little Moses as he lay in the bulrushes, and great Caesar must have encountered them in every country through which he marched with the armies of Rome, —they no doubt consumed the crackers and the oats intended for his soldiers and horses; and William, the Norman, while he could conquer the people of Britain, certainly never overcame the rats of the little island.

Even George Washington, who secured to us our liberties, and laid the foundation of our nation, could never keep the rats out of the foundations of his barn and wagon house. When Ulysses S. Grant fought his great campaign against Richmond, rats multitudinous were with both armies nibbling away at the hardtack,—Union rats and Confederate rats; and when Sherman went marching to the sea, a whole army of rats went along attached to the quarter-master's department.

We have had rats with us from the beginning, we have them now, and we shall have them to the end.

Speaking for Elmwood in particular, we have them at the house, at the barn, in the corn-crib, at the woodshed, in the chicken house, under the haystacks, in the grain-bin, up in the mow, out on the roof, in the water-tank and down in the well. How many, I do not know. I only know if we kill any it does not lessen the number.

I never knew one of our rats to die. They get old but they live on. They do not get sick. My other stock are subject to various maladies, though we take the best of care of them; but my rats keep well. No insurance is necessary on their lives, no physician is ever called. One would think that burrowing in the ground and sleeping in the damp places, as they do, they would become crippled with rheumatism, or take malaria in some form, but they do not. No bacteria attack them, or if they do, they get whipped; and Koch's lymph is quite uncalled for in their case. The dreaded grip passed them by. I never knew a rat to have even a bad cold; and I dare say their young are entirely free from such diseases as affect children—chicken-pox, measles, croup or mumps—and it would be indeed a rare thing to see a rat with whooping cough. No peppermint tea is needed, no soothing syrup nor worm medicine, nor flaxseed poultice. They are not bottle fed, and their teeth come through without pain or trouble.

Part of my barn roof is tin, and here they run races. I often hear them upon frosty nights tearing around, I suppose just for fun. When there is snow they slide toboggan fashion. Harriet is afraid they will fall off and hurt themselves, but I am not anxious on that score. My good wife is not exactly a champion of rats, but she is very tender-hearted and wants them to have fair play. She knows they have few friends, and supposes they have hard times; but in this she is mistaken, and I tell her so. I believe a rat is a happy, prosperous, comfortable, hilarious animal, that gets enough to eat and to wear, with no canker-care to furrow its brow and gnaw its vitals.

Cats only afford amusement for them. Cats and rats rhyme, it is true, but cats can hardly ever keep time in chasing rats. As for traps, I have tried them and found them of little avail. They only make them smile, and if ever one is caught, it is just to ascertain how it feels to be caught and killed. It doesn't hurt a rat to be killed, although it doesn't like it.

I should like to find some good way of getting rid of the rats I own. I have more than my share. I do not raise very much wheat, but considerable of that which I do grow is taken by rats. One season they devoured nearly all my oats, which was very provoking to me; but Harriet did not seem to mind it. She thought the poor things must live anyway, and wished me to let her spread some cheese for them afterwards, so that they would not starve since there were no more oats. I did not mind her doing it so far as the rats I owned were concerned, but I knew if she did, that all the rats for miles around would come trooping to my barn, so I shut down; I drew the line right there, and coaxed her to keep the cheese away.

Now, what can be done with these rats? Who will tell me what to do to rid Elmwood of them? I have no need of them; I don't want them; let them go.

During the year 1908, so figures collected by the state bureau of statistics show, 2,814 fewer couples—or 5,628 fewer persons—obtained licenses to marry than did in the year 1907. Almost 3,000 more marriage ceremonies performed in the year 1907, than during last year. Not only that—there were 120 more divorces in 1908, than in 1907. Eighteen more wives got divorces and 102 more husbands did the same, the total number being 4,253, less than one-sixth of the total number of marriages—26,990. As in other years, almost three times as many wives get divorces as did husbands.

The Raven.

Many birds seek the protection which the presence of man affords against furred and feathered foes when the breeding season approaches. Not so the raven. Its distrust of us is profound, and its nest is placed in some wild spot far out of reach of our possible attack or succor. But there are other enemies. I know of a pair that built on one side of a projecting crag high up on the cliffs of Rathlin island. Some fierce peregrine falcons occupied the other side of the crag, and when one day their eggs were taken by an adventurous collector they, sharing the popular opinion of a raven's blackness, concluded that their neighbors were the offenders and wreaked their grief and vengeance upon them. When, on their return from a foraging expedition, the falcons found their nest despoiled they were seen to hold a consultation, and after much deliberation they suddenly arose and both with one accord flew at the ravens' nest and sacked it, tearing it in their rage and indignation until not one stick was left upon another.—London Standard.

Stop Smoking to Enjoy It Better.

An excellent plan for smokers is to abstain from time to time—that is, fast from all tobacco, say, for weeks or a month at a time. This method enables the smoker to enjoy his smoke more when he goes back to it and is less harmful to his health.

"It is a fine scheme," said one man. "When I stop for a month I am equipped with the keenest relish and liking for a good cigar at the end of that month. I am rested, refreshed, recuperated—in pocket too. Thus I show that I am master of my habit, and not mastered by it. I have been doing this way for a long time now and I heartily recommend my plan to all smokers. I do not limit myself to any number of cigars while in one of my smoking months, but simply smoke at will, and then absolutely quit until another month is through."—Baltimore American.

BABY'S WATERY ECZEMA

Itched and Scratched Until Blood Ran—$50 Spent on Useless Treatments—Disease Seemed Incurable —Cured by Cuticura for $1.50.

"When my little boy was two and a half months old he broke out on both cheeks with eczema. It was the itchy, watery kind and we had to keep his little hands wrapped up all the time, and if he would happen to get them uncovered he would claw his face till the blood streamed down on his clothing. We called in a physician at once, but he gave an ointment which was so severe that my babe would scream when it was put on. We changed doctors and medicines until we had spent fifty dollars or more and baby was getting worse. I was so worn out watching and caring for him night and day that I almost felt sure the disease was incurable. But finally reading of the good results of the Cuticura Remedies, I determined to try them. I can truthfully say I was more than surprised, for I bought only a dollar and a half's worth of the Cuticura Remedies (Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills), and they did more good than all my doctors' medicines I had tried, and in fact entirely cured him. His face is perfectly clear of the least spot or scar of anything. Mrs. W. M. Comerer, Burnt Cabins, Pa., Sept. 15, 1908."

Where It Landed Him.

With a dazed look in his bloodshot eyes the man who had been on a jag for a week or more and had wandered over the country in a half delirious condition without knowing where he was going came to himself.

"Anaconda," answered the policeman.

Magic Theft.

Commissioner Bingham of New York, at a recent dinner, described in a most interesting manner the methods of the skilled pickpocket.

"He is so very clever at his best," concluded the commissioner, "that one might almost believe him capable of the feat attributed to a Western stevedore. A group of stevedores were lunching in a sheltered nook of a wharf. One of them went across the street for a plug of chewing tobacco, and in his absence another substituted for his tin of pale coffee and milk his own tin of milkless black coffee. When the first stevedore, plug in hand, returned, he could hardly believe his eyes.

"'Well,' he said, 'I've heard of clever thieves, but to swipe the milk out of a feller's coffee beats the band!'"

Misunderstood Sympathy.

Paul Morton, at a banquet of insurance men, said of a rival company:

"They had our sympathy in their bad luck, but they took our sympathy in ill part. It was like the widow who called on us the other day. This widow came to collect a small policy due her on her husband's death. Our clerk, as he counted out her money, said sympathetically:

"'I am very sorry to hear of your sad misfortune, ma'am.'

"'Well, that's just like you men,' snapped the widow. 'You're all the same — always sorry when a poor woman gets a chance at a little money.'"

"COFFEE DOESN'T HURT ME."

Tales That Are Told.

"I was one of the kind who wouldn't believe that coffee was hurting me," says a N. Y. woman. "You just couldn't convince me its use was connected with the heart and stomach trouble I suffered from most of the time.

"My trouble finally got so bad I had to live on milk and toast almost entirely for three or four years. Still I loved the coffee and wouldn't believe it could do such damage.

"What I needed was to quit coffee and take nourishment in such form as my stomach could digest.

"I had read much about Postum, but never thought it would fit my case until one day I decided to quit coffee and give it a trial and make sure about it. So I got a package and carefully followed the directions.

"Soon I began to get better and was able to eat carefully selected foods without the aid of pepsin or other digestants, and it was not long before I was really a new woman physically.

"Now I am healthy and sound, can eat anything and everything that comes along and I know this wonderful change is all due to my having quit coffee and got the nourishment I needed through this delicious Postum.

"My wonder is why everyone don't give up the old coffee and the troubles that go with it and build themselves up as I have done, with Postum."

Easy to prove by 10 days' trial of Postum in place of coffee. The reward is big.

"There's a Reason."

ISTHMUS STREWN WITH BONES.

Trip Across Panama Is an Event Even to a Seasoned Globe Trotter.

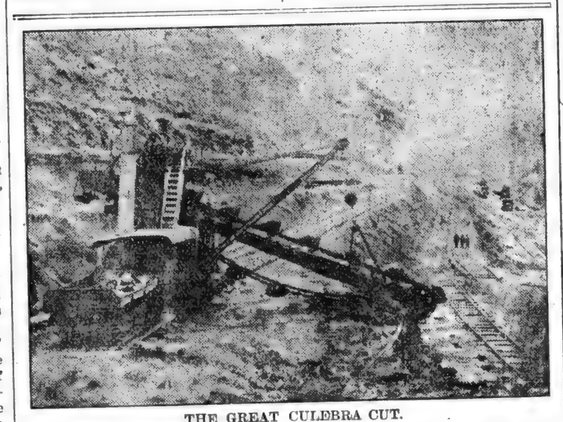
Crossing the Isthmus of Panama by rail the tourist gets an excellent view of the Culebra cut and other well-known wonders of construction, but far off from the railroad are feeders, dams, dikes, fills and spills that are marvels of the engineering world, of which the traveler is unable to get more than a passing glance and one has a wholly inadequate idea of the great canal project, writes Archie Bell.

Forests which screen the work of the Americans from the eyes of passers-by are wonders in themselves, and afford as delightful views of tropical luxuriance as can be found in Brazil, Java, or any other place on earth, more difficult of access, yet more famous on this particular account in the public prints. Here and there are cemeteries with graves marked by crude iron crosses or plain slabs of wood. The ground is filled with the bones of men who went to the isthmus on some mission or other and fell a prey to fever and malaria.

Here are the skulls of the companions of the Spanish explorers, here the graves of Americans who tried to beat their brothers to California in 1849 during the rush for gold. Over yonder is a patch of land where the railroad builders found their last sleep. Everywhere are the graves of canal diggers. Out of one consignment of 8,000 men brought over by the French about 60 survived. Consequently the dredges and steamshovels daily, even hourly, scoop up the skeletons of the unfortunate men whose dead bodies paved the route for the great interoceanic canal.

The tourists across the isthmus will see great flocks of tropical birds, some of them of gaudy plumage and strange voices, which can be heard from the car windows. Turkey buzzards are perched along the route in every direction. Instinct teaches them a good thing when they see it, and there is no happier place for buzzards and vultures than Panama.

The ride from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean on a moderate American train in less than three hours should be an event in the life of the most seasoned globe trotter and there are many side trips by cart and muleback which offer a veritable panorama of surprises to the northerner.



THE GREAT CULEBRA CUT.

FAMILIES IN OLDEN DAYS.

Often Remarkably Large, According to Authentic Records.

The north of England seems to be a fertile soil for large families, for in 1797 we read of a Cumberland man and his wife, accompanied by thirty of their children, all attending the christening of the thirty-first child, says the London Tit-Bits, and in earlier years another north countryman, Thomas Greenhill, applied to the then duke of Norfolk, earl marshal, for an augmentation to his coat-of-arms on the singular ground that he was "the seventh son and the thirty-ninth child of one father and mother."

In Conway churchyard there was to be seen—it can scarcely be there to-day—a tombstone bearing the following remarkable epitaph: "Here lyeth the body of Nicholas Hocker of Conway, gentleman, who was the forty-first child of his father, William Hocker, by Alice, his wife, and the father of twenty-seven children, 1637."

If man's family be considered as including all his descendants, that of Peter Smith, who flourished in New Jersey in the seventeenth century, is entitled to a high place of honor, for at a recent annual gathering of Peter's progeny no fewer than 7,000 met and dined together under the apple trees in the orchard attached to the ancestral homestead.

In families it is not an unknown thing for one child to be old enough to have a sister or brother young enough to be his or her great-grandchild. Thus the eldest son of Thomas Beatty of Drumcondra had passed his 83d birthday when his youngest brother qualified for the cradle. When William Frost, of Galphay, near Ripon, died in 1789 his eldest child was a sturdy boy of 88 summers and his youngest was barely 16, and the Lady Powerscourt of to-day is half a century older than her latest brother.

There are cases on record where a century or more has divided the wedding days of father and son. The first earl of Leicester was first married in 1775 and his son led his second wife to the altar in August, 1875; while Capt. Francis Maude, who was married on June 23, 1840, was following the example his father, Lord Hawarden, had set him ninety-three years earlier, in 1750. But both these cases are quite eclipsed by that of Gen. G. Stevenson of Bristol, who was united to his third wife in 1834 at the age of 82, and whose father was first wed in 1704, the year of Blenheim. This seeming impossibility is accounted for by the fact that the father, who was born in 1680, was married for the third time at the age of 70 and the general was the son of this late union. Thus we get the remarkable result of a man whose father was born in Charles II.'s reign wooing and wedding within the memory of many people still living.

SOME CURIOSITIES IN COLOR.

Blue Rays Hurtful to Fauna and Flora—Green Seen Farthest.

Put a growing plant under red glass and it shoots up very tall and spindly. Green glass causes a similar effect, but not quite so strongly marked. Blue glass, on the other hand, seems to dwarf vegetable growth.

A plant grown under blue glass is always smaller than its neighbor under transparent glass, says the Philadelphia Press, although the conditions are otherwise similar.

A series of experiments in growing plants under various colored glasses was conducted by the well known astronomer, Camille Flammarion, and the results, as above, reported by to the French Academy.

Light and color are full of odd puzzles, many of which are still a good deal of a mystery. Dr. Niel Finsen famous for his electric light invention for the cure of cancer, made exhaustive experiments on the effects of lights of various colors on the various forms of animal life.

One or two of these were very interesting. For instance, he placed a number of earthworms in a box covered half with red, half with blue glass. In every case the worms were found to crawl away from under the blue glass and take shelter under the red, where they remained quite content.

A chameleon lizard was then placed by the experimenter in a small box, so that half its body was under blue and the other half under red glass. He noticed that at once the part under the blue rays turned black, while that part under red light remained almost white. It was evident that the creature was using his pigment cells to protect itself against the disagreeable effects of the blue light.

It is now universally acknowledged that the blue rays are, of all the visible rays which we receive from the sun, the only ones that can produce injurious effects upon animal or plant life. It is these blue rays that cause scarring in smallpox. The skin in this disease becomes almost as sensitive as a photographic plate. If the patient is kept in the dark no scarring results. But a red light is equally harmless as darkness and less unpleasant to the patient.

Sunstroke, as we call it, is produced not by light rays at all, but by the chemical rays of the sun. Sunstroke may thus be termed a photographic effect, and we can therefore use color to fight it.

Treat the body as a photographer treats his dark plates. Envelop it not in black, as is usually done, but in orange. An orange-colored shirt and a coat and hat lined with orange fabric have actually been tried by officers in India, who had to march during hot weather. Men so attired were certainly rendered immune to sunstroke.

Certain blind persons can tell the color of a flower by laying it against their cheek. Actual experimenting shows that blossoms of certain colors are in reality warmer than those of other tints.

A scientist who recently carried out a series of such experiments found that dark reds and browns gave the sensation of greatest warmth, while lemon yellow was the coldest color. Pink is warmer than white, but white, curiously enough is warmer than violet, blue or yellow.

A rather odd fact about yellow is that a yellow light has greater power of penetration in foggy weather than a pure white one. It has been proved that the yellowish light of oil or gas in a lighthouse lantern can be seen farther out at sea than can the pure white of an electric lamp.

In clear weather and by daylight green is visible at the greatest distance of any color much farther, for instance, than scarlet, which is usually imagined to be the most brilliant of colors. Indeed, blue and even dark gray, are far more visible at a distance than is scarlet.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE PROMISE OF DAWN.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil."—Ps. xxiii, 4.

No life goes far without finding its ties reaching out into the beyond. We do well to fix our attention on the duties of our present life, but the great fact of death is never far from us and its portentious mystery asks us a thousand questions, while it approach to those we love stirs us to rebellion or wrings us with agony.

The coward may fear death for himself, but the bravest dread it most when it threatens those they love. Familiarity and use may harden us to everything else, but the experience of the race for thousands of years has not taken from death its dread nor made its mystery clear. If religion is the guiding light of humanity why has its light not yet dispelled this dark shade?

Yet the shadows of the valley have changed. Faith has robbed it of more than half its terrors and love that has grown stronger in the consciousness of a world inspired by love reaches its warm hold through those shadows and believes and knows that our own are not less ours because they have gone on before.

The better we know the life that we now have the greater is our confidence toward that we do not yet have. The pain of death's partings is no longer augumented by those sombre superstitions which committed our friends to the mercies of demons of the under world. The pang of death is not alone the fear of what may lie before; it is the deeper pain of parting.

Our to-morrows are always hidden from us. Each new day is as a new life. The fact of one day gives confidence that there will be another; shall not the fact of one life also give promise of another? How dread would be each night if we knew nothing of the coming morning, and this is just the dread of death, that we never ourselves clearly see its new morn.

We stand on the broad step of life, the steps that lie below, and up which we have climbed we do not know; the steps that lie before are shrouded in mystery. Yet we are all conscious that we stand on a vast flight of steps and that these lead, normally, from lesser life to more. It cannot be that this is the last step, that this broken fragment is the final platform.

If we could but see its meaning, if we could but let our faith reach out and believe that as life has come from less to more, so larger life lies beyond, then death would be the word of largest promise to us, it would mean graduation into higher being, it would mean rising from this time worn and sorrow clouded ledge into a clearer, nobler level.

In the days when grief is most poignant, when the heart seems empty and words of consolation as only mockeries, then the graves by our ways and the cemeteries by our cities seem to turn all life to gloom and over their mounds we dare not hope the sun will ever rise as fair for us again. Yet what would be more desolate than this world without death?

Suppose we knew this to be absolutely the last stage of existence; suppose that none went out from us and that we were all doomed to live here forever, would not this then be a hopeless world? Out of our deepest grief rises that which is really our fairest hope, and in death we see the promise of life that is worth living, because it has the possibility of larger life.

What can we do better than live this life looking up and helping all about us to the life that trends upward? We can have faith that life does not mock us, that the progress of the past gives promise of the future. We can take each day as a step in the great sweep of steps upward. We can afford to trust our highest hopes. We can afford to follow the lead of our own affections and believe that an infinite affection is reflected in them.

We can make the most of to-day for to-morrow may demand infinitely more of us. We can make it possible for all other lives to have larger hopes, can make this day fairer for some, and so give birth to hope and possibility of upward looking and living for them. We can live the life that makes to-day rich with meaning and full with service, because it has other days fairer yet to be.

MANY PROOFS OF IMMORTALITY.

By Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder.

Who hath abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light.—II. Tim. 1:10.

The two greatest facts that confront man are life and death. In nature they appear as an alternate series. The life and beauty of spring are succeeded by the fading and death of winter. But this white sepulchre only proves a fostering cradle in which worn-out nature is resuscitated into all the charm and vigor of new life, and in this alternate series the process goes on forever. Nature, then, does not die, but is invested with immortality.

Man's death, contrariwise, is shrouded in mystery. No mortal man can follow the spirit's trackless path.

Are there, then, any means by which we can get light on this great question of immortality? Are there reasonable grounds for the trust that we shall survive death?

Philosophy is not against it, for the greatest philosophers have believed in it. Science brings affirmative testimony to it. The modern law of the conservatism of force shows no loss or destruction of force or matter. Energy changes, but does not die. Evolution points to a constant unfolding and progress to higher forms of being. The overmastering desire for immortality is one of the strongest grounds for the future life. Just as the lens of the eye points to a world to be seen, or the wing of a bird indicates an aerial medium for flight, so conclusively does the desire for continued existence prophesy its reality. Nature is not a lie. She does not taunt us with false promises. The vitality of the spirit in advanced years is another argument. "The soul does not age with the body," wrote Emerson. A normal man or woman grows in wisdom, spirituality, sympathy, tenderness, charm and moral beauty, so that it is true of such "at evening time there shall be light." Such lovely personalities only seem to die. The husk and shell falls from them, but we feel that their spirits cannot but live on beyond the grave, beyond the worlds. Strong corroborations as are these they are not decisive. We crave for absolute assurance upon a matter of such vital moment. And it can come only from one source—revelation. Should not God speak to those to whom He has given this irrepressible longing and settle it with a word of certainty? And so the Scripture assures us that He has done. "Jesus Christ hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light." He declared the great truth that "all live unto God." Our eyes see death, but God knows only life and sees death but to be a phase of life.

Death is, then, but a stage of development. We enter the future very much as we have left the present life. We will progress in knowledge, in holiness, in happiness or in the evil courses and tendencies of our earthly lives, and, in view of this fact, how important becomes the state in which we enter life—prepared or unprepared, sensual or spiritual, the servants of God or of the evil one.

Lastly, in the light of this great truth of immortality, what grandeur attaches to life! How incalculably it is increased in value when we see it under the aspect of eternity! What care one should have to his acts when they are seeds reaching out into undying ages. How different become our aims and plans when they are not to be broken by death but to be carried forward on larger scale hereafter!

SERMONETTES.

The nearest duty is the highest.

Echoes are always more popular than voices.

No church wins men when it seeks to work them.

Pickled piety always makes a vinegar disposition.

Self-love keeps the life tramping around in a circle.

He who consults only expediency soon silences conscience.

A man is quite likely to disclose his conscience by his suspicions.

The best legacy any man can leave his children is willingnes to work.

The worst of all failures are those who never fail because they never try.

The man who has nothing but reflection puts his headlight on the caboose.

The drudgery we call a drag may be the counterpoise that helps us rise.

It takes more than sharp angles to prove that a man lives a square life.

The dead man has a great advantage over a lazy one, because he eats nothing.

When the conceited man sees his shadow he thinks it is night for the world.

He who is always looking for a soft place finds one in the slough of despond.

The most eloquent prayers to the needy are the ones we carry to them in baskets.

Many a man thinks he is a saint because he has dreams of heaven every Sunday.

To use a great truth for wholly selfish ends may be to make a great lie out of it.

You cannot measure a life by the distance between its early poverty and its later income.

Because some blessings are promised to the poor many try to earn them by being poor kind of people.

Many who are proud of their flow of ideas forget that a half empty bottle flows more readily than a full one.

The danger of the one talent man today is not that he will bury it but that he will do nothing but brag of it.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that the lowliest walk sounds louder in heaven than the loudest talk.

Don't imitate the man who wants noble character but is unwilling to go to its school.

Don't fail to note that the mark of a heavenly blessing is that it ignores all our earthly boundaries.

Don't overlook the fact that the honesty of your efforts for justice is seen in your attitude to the helpless.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that because you are blind in business you must be blest with spiritual vision.

Don't fail to remember that renouncing your own sins is better preaching than denouncing the ways of others.

AN INDIGESTION REMEDY FREE

Many people who are otherwise healthy suffer from indigestion, or dyspepsia. When you consider that the stomach and allied digestive organs are the most important organs of the body, it would seem that a disorder there is to be taken very seriously.

Dyspeptics cannot eat the things they like; food sours in the stomach, then chronic constipation begins, or, as is often the case, you have been constipated all along, and the stools are forced and irregular.

But there is no use letting indigestion go until it becomes chronic and undermines your health. It is good advice to suggest to you that you go to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the wonderful cure for stomach, liver and bowel troubles. That is what C. Fowler, of Carson City, Mich., did and he is well to-day. Others who did the same and are cured are Ida A. Fortune, of Grand Junction, Tenn.; B. F. Thompson, of Shenandoah, Ia., who actually considers that it saved his life. You can obtain a 50-cent or $1 bottle of the druggist, and, taken according to directions, it will probably be all you need. It is a liquid, acts gently, never gripes, and besides the laxative effect, contains exceptional tonic properties which tone the stomach, and that is what is especially needed in indigestion.

All sufferers from indigestion who have never used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can obtain a free test bottle by writing the doctor. It will be sent direct to your home without any charge. In this way thousands have proven to their own satisfaction Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the very remedy they needed to cure indigestion. When once you use this grand remedy you will throw violent cathartics, tablets, salts, etc., away.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Shed Water Pongee is used in this costume. It is spot-proof, and a joy forever. The unexpected summer shower has no terrors for the wearer of this silk. Dark blue is the color used here. The skirt shows the partial return of the kilt, but modified by a deep yoke. The trimming is effectively done in a wide soutache, a shade lighter than the silk.

PLANS FOR THE CAPITOL.

The business of the architect was not as profitable one hundred and sixteen years ago as it is at the present time; neither did the architect himself, judging by old accounts, hold quite the despotic position that he is supposed to occupy to-day. The reports of the designing of the Capitol and the "President's House" make interesting, and in some respects amusing, reading to the modern mind. Early in January, 1791, President Washington appointed a board of commissioners to fix, locate and survey the site appropriated by Congress "for establishing the permanent seat of Government of the United States." This federal district was named the "Territory of Columbia," and then came the question of housing Congress.

To David Stuart, one of the commissioners, Washington wrote:

"The plan ought to be prosecuted with all despatch, and the buildings in size, form and elegance look beyond the present day. I would not have it understood I lean to extravagance. A chaste plan, sufficiently capacious and convenient for a period not too remote, but one to which we may reasonably look forward, would meet my idea in the Capitol."

In the Georgetown Weekly Ledger of March 31, 1792, the following advertisement appeared:

"Washington, Territory of Columbia.

"A PREMIUM

"Of a lot in this City to be designated by impartial judges, and five hundred dollars or a medal of that value, at the option of the party, will be given by the Commissioners of the Federal Buildings to the persons who, before the 15th of July, 1792, shall produce to them the most approved plan, if adopted by them, for a Capitol to be erected in this City; and two hundred and fifty dollars or a medal for the plan deemed next in merit to the one they shall adopt."

Sixteen plans were submitted. Those of Stephen Hallet would undoubtedly have been accepted and their designer have received the magnificent reward had not William Thornton, an amateur, shown to Washington drawings which made the President enthusiastic over the "grandeur, simplicity and beauty of exterior, the propriety with which the apartments are distributed, and the economy of the whole mass of structure."

Hallet had been encouraged, however, to believe that he was the successful competitor. In conciliation, the President suggested that Thornton's designs be accepted, but that as he was not a professional architect, Hallet be retained as director. The commissioners evidently felt the awkwardness of the situation. "We feel sensibly for poor Hallet," they wrote, "and shall do all in our power to soothe him."

Hallet put Thornton's plans into practical shape; but there was too much reason for jealousy in the situation for the two to work amicably together, and after a time Hallet was discharged.

A second munificent award of five hundred dollars was given to the designer of the "President's House."

Lincoln's Irony.

That Lincoln's philosophy was too shrewd and sane for him to countenance the effect rising up against the cause is proved anew by the following story from the Boston Post. The Hon. Alexander H. Rice once paid a visit to President Lincoln on behalf of a Boston boy who had been imprisoned for robbing his employer's letters.

After reading the petition, signed by many citizens of Boston, the President stretched himself in his chair, and asked Mr. Rice if he had met a man going downstairs.

"Yes, Mr. President," replied Mr. Rice.

"His errand," said the President, "was to get a man pardoned out of the penitentiary; and now you have come to get a boy out of jail."

Then, with characteristic humor, Mr. Lincoln continued: "I'll tell you what it is, we must abolish these courts or they will be the death of us. I thought it bad enough that they put so many men in the penitentiary for me to get out; but if they have now begun on the boys and the jails, and have roped you into the delivery, let's after them!

"They deserve the worst fate," he went on, "because, according to the evidence that comes to me, they pick out the very best men and send them to the penitentiary; and this present petition shows they are playing the same game on the boys and sending them all to jail.

"The man that you met on the stairs affirmed that his friend in the penitentiary is a most exemplary citizen, and Massachusetts must be a happy State if her boys out of jail are as virtuous as this one appears to be who is in.

"Yes, down with the courts and deliverance to their victims, and then we can have some peace!"

A Reason for Helping.

The poor help the poor more than the rich help them. An official of the Department of Charities in New York recently remarked this trait.

"Everything has its cause, its simple and striking cause, if we can but find it," he said. "Once, in a miserable slum, I heard two little girls talking about this matter of poverty and wealth and helpfulness.

"'Why is it,' said the first, 'that the poor allus is more willin' to help us than the rich?'

"The second child replied promptly, and not without some bitterness, 'Them wot don't mind givin' is the ones wot stays poor.'"

The Ancient Stone Slingers.

It has been said that Asiatic nations excelled others in the use of the sling, and the slingers of an ancient army used their little weapons with terrible effect. "These natives have such skill," says one old historian, "that it very rarely happens that they miss their aim. What makes them so great in the use of the sling is the training given them from their earliest years by their mothers, who set up a piece of bread hung at the end of a rod for a target and let their children remain without food until they have hit it, when the child who is the victor receives the bread as the reward of his skill and patience."

Throat Troubles Weaken the System.

A serious illness is often brought on by a neglected sore throat.

All throat troubles invariably weaken the system and should not be allowed to go unchecked.

A gargle made with twelve drops of Sloan's Liniment in half a glass of water will break up a sore throat.

Sloan's Liniment is an excellent remedy for tonsilitis, croup, asthma and bronchitis. Applied freely to the outside of the throat and chest it draws out the inflammation, reduces the swelling and relieves any soreness. Twelve drops of this Liniment in half a glass of water makes a splendid antiseptic gargle.

Mr. Albert W. Price of Fredonia, Kans., writes:—"We have used Sloan's Liniment in the family for about a year, and find it an excellent relief for colds and hay fever attacks. Two drops of the Liniment in a teaspoonful of water will stop coughing and sneezing instantly."

Mr. L. T. Hurst of Contesville, Ind., R. R. No. 1, writes:—"I find your Liniment the best remedy I have ever tried for sore throat, either for horse or man. I once cured a case of sore throat on myself the second day and almost the first night, which had continued for over three weeks, under constant treatment of three physicians (I was traveling) and it was getting worse."

First Japanese Stowaway.

The first Japanese stowaway ever brought to Boston arrived on a steamer from London the other day. He gave his name as Tasujo Nakamura, aged 20, and claimed to have been a member of the crew of an American sailing vessel.

It was learned that he was a sailor on board the ship Johanna, which arrived at Falmouth, Eng., some months ago. He was starving in London when he determined to come to this country. He wandered about the docks in the Thames and stole on board the Philadelphian and hid in the coal bunkers.

Nakamura said he was all through the Russian-Japanese war, having been one of the crew of a cruiser in the Japanese fleet.

Inspector Root examined the man and ordered that he be sent back on the Philadelphian when she leaves on her return trip.

Let Me Tell You Something

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is to blame for her own wretched condition.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what these women say:

Camden, N. J.—"It is with pleasure that I send my testimonial for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, hoping it may induce other suffering women to avail themselves of the benefit of this valuable remedy.

"I suffered from pains in my back and side, sick headaches, no appetite, was tired and nervous all the time, and so weak I could hardly stand. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman—and this valuable medicine shall always have my praise."—Mrs. W. P. Valentine, 902 Lincoln Ave., Camden, N. J.

Erie, Pa.—"I suffered for five years from female troubles, and at last was almost helpless. I tried three doctors but they did me no good. My sister advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has made me well and strong. I hope all suffering women will just give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial, for it is worth its weight in gold."—Mrs. J. P. Endlich, R. F. D. 7, Erie, Pa.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

WHAT JOY THEY BRING TO EVERY HOME

as with joyous hearts and smiling faces they romp and play—when in health—and how conducive to health the games in which they indulge, the outdoor life they enjoy, the cleanly, regular habits they should be taught to form and the wholesome diet of which they should partake. How tenderly their health should be preserved, not by constant medication, but by careful avoidance of every medicine of an injurious or objectionable nature, and if at any time a remedial agent is required, to assist nature, only those of known excellence should be used; remedies which are pure and wholesome and truly beneficial in effect, like the pleasant laxative remedy, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna has come into general favor in many millions of well informed families, whose estimate of its quality and excellence is based upon personal knowledge and use.

Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna has also met with the approval of physicians generally, because they know it is wholesome, simple and gentle in its action. We inform all reputable physicians as to the medicinal principles of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, obtained by an original method, from certain plants known to them to act most beneficially, and presented in an agreeable syrup in which the wholesome Californian blue figs are used to promote the pleasant taste; therefore it is not a secret remedy, and hence we are free to refer to all well informed physicians, who do not approve of patent medicines and never favor indiscriminate self-medication.

Please to remember and teach your children also that the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna always has the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package and that it is for sale in bottles of one size only. If any dealer offers any other than the regular Fifty cent size, or having printed thereon the name of any other company, do not accept it. If you fail to get the genuine you will not get its beneficial effects. Every family should always have a bottle on hand, as it is equally beneficial for the parents and the children, whenever a laxative remedy is required.

Tonic or Stimulant?

Safe Blowers Visit Town.

Made an Effort to Blow Vault of City Bank, Friday Morning, But Failed.

Not until late Friday morning was it discovered that safe blowers had made a visit to our town. The St. Joe Valley Bank had been tried but without any good results for the offenders. The men had constructed a wigwam against the south side of the bank out of boxes and boards over which a heavy rug was placed for their protection. Some of the material used in this fixing was brought from the barn of J. D. Leighty while some of the plank was secured at Frank Barney's wool rooms and were carted to the bank on a two wheeled cart which was left standing in the yard. The tools used in the job were a brace and bit, wrench and crobar, all of which were taken from Sheffer's blacksmith shop. As soon as everything was arranged the work was commenced. The hole was started nearly two and a half feet from the corner of the wall, upon getting a hole through the first course of brick to the air chamber, they ceased boreing and the hole was fired. Upon the ground lay the fuse which they used but the charge was not in the right position to do the damage that it was intended to do. The wall was over two feet thick and the hole runs only eight inches thus the charge of powder was dropped to the bottom of the wall making the charge worthless. Should the wall have been torn down they would have had a hard job to blow the vault without being caught in the act, as people live so close to the building that they would have been aroused. The bank was covered by insurance but with this the damage which might have resulted could not have been replaced. The whole affair seemed to be handled by amateurs as no tact was displayed in their arrangements. However, we are glad that it was no more disastrous.

Barrett, Atty., were in town Tuesday inspecting a route for an interurban line to be extended from the Robison Park line north through this territory or east through Marysville and Hicksville on north. Option Election

A mass meeting has been called by the temperance leaders of the county, to convene at Auburn, Saturday, May 8 for the purpose of arranging for a county option election. It is said that there are localities now dry by remonstrance but which will be ineffectual within a short time. There are also places made "dry" in the same way but where remonstrances have expired and in these places there are attempts being made to reinstate saloons. There is a difference of opinion as to how DeKalb county would vote and several temperance people fear that the wets would outvote them. Another thing considered is that Garrett, Auburn, Waterloo and Butler will hold city elections in November and that the question might get in politics unless settled in some other way.

Mrs. O. H. Widney Dead

Once more we are called upon to chronicle the death of one of our beloved and respected citizens, Mrs. Emily Widney, the esteemed wife of O. H. Widney. She passed to her reward Tuesday shortly after noon. She was first taken down with a light stroke of paralysis on April 19, making her helpless. In a few days she seemed to be better although unable to talk. She remained in this condition for several days until the latter part of last week she became able to say "Oliver" so that her attendants knew what she said. As days passed her condition changed and finally she became unconscious and it was certain that her time here was short, and on Tuesday her spirit took its flight. The funeral services will be held at the house this (Thursday) afternoon at 2 o'clock. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

GALE HITS NORTHERN OHIO.

Death and Ruin in Path of the Furious Storm.

Eight persons were killed, seven fatally hurt, at least fifty sustained injuries and property valued at more than $1,000,000 was destroyed in a tornado which swept through Cleveland and northern Ohio. From the northeast off the lake came a gale blowing sixty-six miles an hour. In its wake followed a sheet of rain and hail which fell with terrific force. Pedestrians were blown off their feet and hurled against buildings, in many cases to be struck down by flying bricks and timbers which filled the air. Roofs were lifted off houses, walls hurled down, strongly braced smokestacks picked up and chimneys demolished, porches stripped off residences and small buildings carried away. Debris was gathered into the wind to be deposited elsewhere. In some instances roofs were carried for a distance of three hundred feet. Skylights and windows were crushed. Many persons were injured by flying glass. Twelve school buildings were damaged. Many pupils had remarkable escapes, but none was seriously hurt. The roof was lifted from the main building of the Case School of Applied Science, and buildings at Adelbert college sustained impairments. The largest single injury that was done was the St. Stanislaus church, East Sixty-fifth street and Forman avenue. The wind practically demolished the structure. The loss is estimated at $125,000. The church was built five years ago at a cost of $150,000. Subscription papers will be started soon to raise money to repair the damage done to churches. It is estimated that a total loss of $200,000 has been sustained by churches other than the St. Stanislaus.

The legislature of 1899 being republican, Mr. Turpie was retired and Albert J. Beveridge succeeded him. Mr. Turpie was born in Hamilton county Ohio, in 1829. He came to Indiana in childhood, was reared and educated in this state and began the practice of law at Monticello. From that time on he was conspicuous in state and national politics until his retirement.

Train Wreck Fatal to Three.

A washout sent a Grand Trunk freight train from Grand Haven, east bound, into the ditch one mile west of Grand Rapids, Mich. Three men were killed and one was fatally injured. The washout was caused by a terrific rainstorm. Hundreds of highway bridges were washed away and miles of fences are down. Roadways are washed away and in several places the water is up to the level of the Pere Marquette tracks. The Kalamazoo and Black rivers are far out of their banks and rising. There has been heavy damage near Zeeland and Hudsonville.

FIVE THOUSAND SLAIN BY MOSLEM FANATICS

Information Through Consular Channels Places High Estimate on Number of Victims

SULTAN'S ABDICATION RUMORED

Young Turk Forces Surround Constantinople and Abdul Hamid Declared Ready to Yield All.

Five thousand persons lost their lives in the massacres in the vilayet of Adana, Asia Minor, during eight days as a result of the outbreak of Moslem fanaticism. Two thousand were killed in the city of Adana, more than 200 of the victims being Moslems. This information was received in Constantinople through consular channels.

Abdul Hamid II. has abdicated the throne of the Ottoman Empire, according to a dispatch sent in cipher from Constantinople and received in London. The young Turks have issued a proclamation naming Mohammed Rechad Effendi, Abdul Hamid's brother, as his successor.

A report that Sultan Abdul Hamid had abdicated caused the greatest excitement in the lobbies of Parliament and spread with lightning-like rapidity throughout the city of Constantinople. A rumor of the flight of the Sultan on a warship followed closely on that of his abdication, but neither could be confirmed.

Large crowds gathered at the British embassy, where, other reports had it, the Sultan had taken refuge, and there were scores of inquiries at the Russian embassy concerning the truth of the rumor that his majesty was under the protection of Russia on one of its guard ships. At both of these embassies all knowledge of the Sultan's movements was denied, and the Turkish foreign office also gave a strong denial to one and all of these rumors.

The abdication of Abdul Hamid, however, seems not improbable, and it appears that the constitutionalists may accept as his successor Prince Yussof Izzedin, the eldest son of the late Sultan, who is second in line, as they are strongly displeased with Abdul Hamid's attitude. The palace was under strong guard, and even high officials were not permitted to enter it.

All the forts surrounding Constantinople, from the Sea of Marmora to the Black Sea, are occupied by the constitutional troops, and the soldiers supporting the Young Turks are advancing upon the capital. A telegram from Smyrna, Asiatic Turkey, says that Andre Kopassis Effendi, Prince of Samos, an appointee of the Sultan, was murdered. American missionaries at Mersina are safe, according to a cable dispatch received in New York.

BREAD COST RISES.

New York Fears Famine Rates if Wheat Corner Is Not Broken.

With flour up 40 cents a barrel and the prospects apparently good for a further rise, New York City is now facing the possibility of bread at 7 cents a loaf. What will appear to hundreds of thousands in the poorer quarters like famine rates for this staple bid fair to be forced as a result of the recent rise in the price of wheat. The Ghetto of New York has already felt the effect of the buoyancy of the Chicago wheat pit. Six cents a loaf is the price now charged by some bakeries, while the proprietors of hundreds of others declare that they cannot continue selling at 5 cents much longer, with flour of the better grades costing from $7 to $7.20 a barrel, against $6.60 to $6.80 a few days ago. They add, moreover, that with flour permanently up to the rates recently quoted even 6 cents would not give them any sort of a profit.

DEMAND $6,000 OR WILL KILL.

Members of a Gang Terrorize Minnesota Farmer with Grave Threats.

Six young men have been arrested in Preston, Minn., on suspicion of threatening murder and kidnaping. Their names are kept secret until others believed to belong to the same gang are gathered in. Emil Dreckman, a farmer, is the complainant. He says he recently received a letter demanding $6,000 in cash and when he ignored it a second note warned him to hurry with the payment. Later his house was surrounded one night by a crowd of fifteen men and boys who fired shots and shouted threats. Promising to kill any who invaded his home, he held the gang at bay until daylight, when all left. A box of dynamite was found on his porch and a note saying if he did not pay, his little boy would be stolen or himself killed. The investigation and arrests followed.

CHURCH'S $1,000 BILL BAD.

Counterfeit of Big Denomination in Collection Plate at Worship.

The discovery that the $1,000 bill found in the collection place of the First Methodist Church at Roscoe, Pa., a week ago Sunday, is a spurious note has led the authorities to the conclusion that a gang of clever counterfeiters is operating in that section, and sending out "phoney" bills of large denominations. When the Roscoe church found the note, thinking that it had been given by mistake for a smaller denomination, they advertised for the owner. Then they discovered at a local bank that it was counterfeit. The Postoffice Department was notified, and branded the counterfeit as one of the most clever that had ever been circulated.

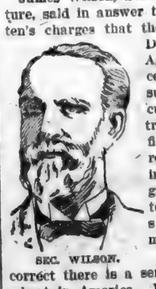
That fellow in Chicago is engaged in a scheme to rob the consumer and to make money."



SEC. WILSON.

If Mr. Patten is correct there is a serious shortage in wheat in America. If Secretary Wilson is cororect there is no shortage at all, but only an artificial famine engendered by Mr. Patten for speculative purposes. Also, if Secretary Wilson is correct, Mr. Patten's deal will go to smash soon.

The Secretary of Agriculture insists that the government's report to the effect that there were 143,000,000 bushels of reserve wheat in the farmers' hands on March 1 was strictly correct and that he knows where the wheat is. "We do not get our information from postmasters!" exclaimed Secretary Wilson angrily when the Patten statement was shown him. "We get it from farmers who are reliable, conscientious men. We have been perfecting our system for gathering information for the last twelve years, and it is as correct and thorough as it is possible to get. To corner the wheat market successfully nowadays you have to keep buying and buying and buying. Finally the time comes when you can't buy any more, and then the smash comes."

Boats Clear from Buffalo.

Navigation was opened Friday, when ten big lake freighters plowed their way through the ice and made clear water off Point Abino, about twelve miles up Lake Erie. Union pickets were active along the water front, but there was no trouble. Nine of the steamers were manned with nonunion men from engineers to deckhands.

MANY DIE IN BURNING HOTEL.

Six Bodies Found, Others Still in the Ruins of San Francisco Building.

Six bodies recovered and probably eight or ten others buried in the ruins; six injured, one fatally, and property loss of $125,000 are the results of an early morning fire that destroyed the St. George Hotel, a lodging-house for laborers, and eight other small buildings in San Francisco. The bodies taken to the morgue were so charred that identification was impossible. The hotel was a three-story frame building and burned so rapidly that none of the 200 occupants had time to dress, and many escaped by jumping to the roof of an adjoining workship. Scores clambered down the ladders of the firemen and the fire escapes, and four jumped to safety into the net held by the fire fighters. Of the regular boarders thirty are unaccounted for, but it is believed that many of them escaped in the confusion and have neglected to report their safety.

ELEVATOR BOY RESCUES GIRLS.

Runs Car Through Blinding Smoke to Top of Gotham Building.

Fire in the Empire Building at Broadway and Bleeker street, New York, entrapped 150 girls working on one of the upper floors. The dense smoke was carried quickly up the elevator shaft, which was open and at the bottom of which was Tony Sarino, the elevator boy, and his car. He knew nothing of the fire until aroused by the screams from the girls on the tenth floor, who were imprisoned by the smoke which filled the elevator shaft and the stairs. Sarino shot his car through the smoke to the top of the shaft and bravely made more than a half-dozen trips to the street level, bringing many of the girls to safety. Others of the girls were brave enough to descend by the fire escapes.

SOTHERN DIVORCE IS LOST.

Nevada Court Denies Decree Asked for by Actress Against Spouse.

One of the most important legal decesions ever written in a District Court of the State of Nevada was handed down and filed Monday in the second judicial District Court in Reno by Judge W. H. A. Pike, when, in an elaborate opinion on the marriage and divorce law of Nevada, he announced his refusal to entertain jurisdiction of the celebrated proceeding begun last July by Virginia Harned Sothern for divorce from E. H. Sothern.

Judge Pike's decision, it is conceded, settles beyond question the fact that Mrs. Sothern cannot secure a divorce from her husband unless either she or her husband comes to the State and takes up such a residence there as proves conclusively a bona fide intention to remain there. The particular point settled is that on complaint filed by a non-resident plaintiff with process served on a non-resident defendant, who happens to be temporarily in the State, no jurisdiction is secured for the purposes of allowing a divorce decree.

The effect of the decision will be revolutionary. There are at least twenty-five actions which are withheld awaiting the outcome of this investigation, and it is probable that the seekers will either return to the East or settle down to the former custom of waiting six months, which custom was religiously followed until the originality of Mrs. Sothern's counsel devised a plan that up to now promised hope.

MARION GREY MUST GO TO JAIL

United States Court of Appeals Upholds Her Conviction.

Conviction of Marion Grey, the cupid agent who conducted the "Searchlight Club" at Elgin, Ill., and the sentence of the young woman to serve one year in the bridewell were upheld by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. Miss Grey was found guilty in the District Court and was sentenced by Judge Landis for conducting a soul-mating business, from whose decision an appeal was taken by the attorney for the matrimonial agency proprietor.

4 MEN LYNCHED IN ADA, OKLA.

Mob Which Hangs Cattlemen Said to Have Met in Club's Rooms.

Four cattlemen were taken from the jail in Ada, Okla., Monday and lynched by a mob of 100 citizens. The mob is said to have been organized in the Commercial Club's rooms and marched to the jail at 3 a. m. Only one man stood guard at the prison and he was overpowered and the four prisoners were taken to a near-by barn and hanged from the rafters. The bodies were cut down at 9 a. m. Those lynched were: J. B. Miller of Fort Worth, Texas; B. B. Burrell of Duncan, Okla.; Jesse West of Canadian, Texas; Joe Allen of Canadian, Texas. West and Allen were well-to-do Texans and large cattle owners. The men were held on a charge of complicity in the murder of A. L. Bobbitt, former United States marshal, near Ada, last February. Bobbitt was shot from ambush on his way home. An examining trial was held Thursday, but no indictment was returned. Miller, one of the victims, leaves a wife in Fort Worth. He had killed six men in his life and was a chum of Pat Garrett, the famous man hunter, and was with Garrett when he was killed at Las Cruces, N. M. The mob was composed of many well-known Ada citizens. The authorities were powerless to prevent the lynching. So intense was the feeling at the preliminary hearing of the men that Judge Brown prohibited the publication of the evidence. Burrell was a nephew of Miller and turned State's evidence against Miller and told of complete plans of West and Allen to murder Bobbitt, an enemy of both.

He was arrested on complaint of neighbors, who insisted that he forced the garb and the toil upon his daughter to save the wages of a hired man.

FLOUR MAY GO TO $10 BARREL, SAY MILLERS

Managers for Minneapolis Concerns See No Relief in Sight at Present.

WHEAT SCARCITY IS GENERAL

Argentina's Crop Short—Mexico Has Famine—Flour $1.30 Higher than Last Year.

Rise in the price of flour until the mills in America are selling spring wheat flour at $7 a barrel, or $1.30 more than a year ago, is brought to light as one of the effects of the present condition of the wheat market and the country's supply of the cereal. According to the Chicago Daily News, managers of the Washburn-Crosby Company, the Pillsbury-Washburn Company and the Northwestern Consolidated Milling Company, which operate what are declared the largest mills in the United States, and practically fix the price of flour, say there is no relief in sight from present conditions, and every indication is that the price of flour will continue to soar and may go to $10 a barrel. The rise in the wholesale millers' price is being followed by a rise in the price to brokers and consumers and will result in materially affecting the price of bread and bakery goods. The price of rye flour and other breadstuffs has also been increased, the rise in the price of rye flour per barrel being about 30 cents in less than a month.

The managers of the milling companies deny that there is any combination to increase prices or to control the business. They insist that the rise in the price of flour is due to the scarcity of wheat and breadstuffs in Europe and other countries, to the insufficient supply in the United States in the light of the demands which are now being made and to the general wheat situation.

The price for wheat will be stiff all through the summer, the millers declare. The United States has grown a larger crop than a year ago, but the world's supply is short. There is a wheat, flour and bread famine in Mexico. The price of Argentine wheat is $1.25 per bushel and of Winnipeg or Canadian wheat about $1.27. The shipments from Argentina are short and Argentina has been shipping principally to Liverpool. This increased the Liverpool demand for American shipments.

It requires five bushels of wheat to make a barrel. Taken at $1.29 per bushel the wheat in each barrel of flour costs $6.45. Add to that 40 cents for sacks or wood basins, 20 cents for freight, 15 cents for delivery, 5 cents for storage and 25 cents for selling and carrying accounts. That will make the cost price of flour $7.50, from which deduct 40 cents for "off-alls" or the bran and other products saved from the wheat, which makes the price $7.10. And in some instances the freight, delivery, storage and other expenses are higher than those given. It would not be surprising in the light of present existing conditions and in the face of the outlook for the future that flour would go to $10 per barrel.

DOCTOR'S FAT RUM FEES.

Ten Thousand Prescriptions for Liquor at $1 Each.

The anti-saloon people of Morgantown, W. Va., who have been wondering for some time past why so many drunken men were seen on the streets since the county was voted "dry" over a year ago have been given a rude shock by District Attorney Boyd, who declares that the physicians and the druggists of Morgantown have been reaping the golden harvest that formerly went to the liquor men. According to announcement made in court by Prosecuting Attorney Boyd, one prominent physician alone has written 10,000 prescriptions for liquor during the past year. Mr. Boyd announced his intention of making wholesale prosecutions against the physicians. Similar conditions are said to exist through other "dry" districts.

STRAWBERRIES CAUSE ILLNESS.

Californians Poisoned by a Solution Used to Destroy Insects.

Scores of persons in Los Angeles, Cal., have been poisoned in the last few days by strawberries shipped from Japanese gardens near Gardena and from several other districts. None of the cases have been serious. Complaints were so numerous that Chief of Police Dishman sent a letter to the horticultural commission, asking its members to stop the use of poison to kill insects on strawberry plants. The Japanese practically are the only offenders, according to reports. Early in the season many worms appeared, as a last resort the gardeners used a powerful solution to destroy them.

Private Capital to Dig Extension to the U. S. Irrigation Channel.

Through the filing in Grand Junction, Col., of a plat for an extension to the government high line canal to be built by private capital the first public intimation was given of a project second only in importance to the government project itself. The canal will cost $2,000,000 and will reclaim 250,000 acres of land. Beginning at the lower end of the government canal the extension will run 100 miles into Utah to a point in a canyon where a reservoir five miles in length will be built.

Race for a Wife

BY

HAWLEY SMART

CHAPTER XX.

Sam Pearman had received the writ of service of this heriot claim with apparent equanimity. It must be borne in mind that practiced speculators on the turf, as elsewhere, are accustomed to take their reverses with much outward nonchalance. But, nevertheless, when his visitors had departed he commenced pacing the room after the manner of a caged tiger. It was not likely Denison, whom he had deemed so entirely in his power, would have ventured upon such a bold stroke as this except under very high legal opinion, and whatever it might suit him at the time to say in disparagement of Rumford, he was quite aware that no counsel's opinion in London stood in higher repute. He foresaw, at one sweep, the upset of all his forthcoming schemes. His father had told him how Harold Denison had first taken his pretensions to Maude's hand. He knew, none better, how, under the pressure brought to bear upon him, the squire of Glinn's self-interest had been enlisted in his behalf. He was far too keen a judge to think that he had any hold upon Maude's affections; his idea was that she just liked him sufficiently to marry him if her parents made a point of it. He was entirely ignorant of there being a favored lover in the field. He felt little doubt that if Denison could extricate himself from his power—and should he establish his claim he would go near to do so—his marriage would be postponed to the Greek Kalends.

Now for the other point. If he disputes this "right of heriot," could they prevent his running Coriander for the Two Thousand? That became a question of great importance. He had backed the horse heavily—yes, taking last Monday's work into consideration, very heavily—for the race; and if he was not to run, there at once was a loss of some thousands, to say nothing of the big stake he had hoped to win over that event.

"Ah!" he exclaimed, "that's it! There is some inkling of this in the turf market, and that's the reason the horse has been so much laid against lately. This accounts for Flyart's determined attack, and his betting me a hundred even that he don't start. I'm off to town by the three train."

Pearman drove straight to his solicitor's, from Waterloo Station. Office hours were over, but he contrived to catch one of the firm—as shrewd an attorney as one would often meet with. He shook his head over the case more especially when he heard of Rumford's adverse opinion.

"I don't like it, Mr. Pearman, at all, but I will look over the Mannersley title deeds the first thing to-morrow morning, and then go over to Hawk, Sparrowbill and Co. and ask them if they will let me see Rumford's opinion. But these unenfranchised heriots are the very deuce to deal with if the right, as in your case, is of great value, and the opposite side are aware of it."

"Well, you must make out all you can for me. What time shall I be at your office to-morow?—the earlier the better, mind. Time in this case is worth something like half a sovereign a minute to me."

"Certainly, sir. Say ten; and you mustn't mind if you have to wait for me; I shall be conferring with the enemy, but I'll be back at the office as near that as I can."

"That'll just do. I must catch the eleven train from Waterloo, if possible. Good-night."

Sam Pearman strolled into his club. He was, as one may naturally suppose in no great humor for conversation. It is one of the drawbacks of these pleasant caravansaries that the old adage of "Save me from my friends" is unattainable therein. You always run the chance of some garrulous acquaintance discoursing upon that amusing case in the divorce court, utterly unconscious that you are one of the parties implicated. You are asked, perhaps, after your wife, by some old friend of bygone years who is entirely ignorant that you have either buried or separated from her. Our taciturn British reserve has its advantages. Why should there not be a small coffee room instituted for sulky members, where attempts at conversation should be penalized with expulsion? There are times when we hate even ourselves—much more our fellow creatures.

Pearman was imbued with a considerable amount of this latter feeling as he strolled into the Theatine and ordered his dinner. His Nemesis was awaiting him. Ere he had finished his soup, a blue-eyed, fair-haired, vacuous member had greeted him, and asked him what the deuce was the matter with Coriander?

"Nothing. The horse is well enough. Why?"

"Why, haven't you seen the evening papers?"

"No; I have only just got to town. What about it?"

"They are laying all sorts of prices against him. He is quoted at fifteen to one offered, and rumor says, in some cases twenties have been laid."

"Hum," grunted Pearman. "You'd better lay it, Curson, if you think he's gone. I can only say, when you see he's about to start for the Two Thousand, I recommend you to hedge every shilling, if you do."

"Thanks," drawled the other, and walked away to disseminate what he had gathered from Coriander's owner.

His solicitor the next morning gave Pearman little satisfaction. Messrs. Hawk, and Sparrowbill had been most courteous; they had allowed him to see the deed, and also Sergeant Rumford's opinion thereon. In his humble opinion, the case was very strong; the writ of seisure they had issued would hold perfectly good; they might take Coriander when they liked. "And I am afraid, sir," he concluded, "that we should only get cast if we tried to upset."

"Then they can prevent my running the horse next week, if I contest this claim legally at once?"

"I should be afraid so, really; but in negotiation you had better insist upon your right to, of course, do what you like with the horse till their claim to him is established."

"Very good. Now I am off."

On arrival at Xminster, Pearman proceeded direct to Glinn, and inquired for Mr. Denison. He was shown into the library, and speedily joined by that gentleman.

"I have come over, Mr. Denison, to have some conversation with you about the somewhat preposterous claim of yours as to 'right of heriot' over Mannersley."

"I am advised," replied the squire, "that the claim is a perfectly valid one, and of course, just now valuable."

"My dear sir, I am not alluding to the right or wrong of the case; but, situated as we are to each other, it seems rather absurd our going to law with each other."

"Better, Mr. Pearman, say, situated as we were. Moreover, the nearer and dearer the relationship, the more acrimonious the law suit; for a bitter quarrel commend me to brothers, from Cain and Abel downwards."

"Then I am to understand that my engagement with Miss Denison is at an end? May I ask upon what grounds it is broken off?"

"If you wish to know upon what terms you stand with Miss Denison, see her, and don't trouble me."

"You said 'situated as we were.'"

"Of course I did. I owed you £10,000, and hadn't got it. Now, it seems, you also owe me £10,000, which, of course, makes my not being able to pay you of very little consequence."

"But you consented to my engagement with your daughter."

"And would now, if I thought you'd ever want it."

"I don't understand you."

"Then it's no use continuing this conversation."

"Will you answer me a straightforward question? May I ask you if my engagement with your daughter is still to hold good? I care little about this other affair, if that remains as it was."

"And don't I keep telling you that that being an arrangement between Maude and yourself if you have any doubts upon the subject, you had better see her?"

"I will ask leave to do so presently. In the mean time, Mr. Denison, to return to this claim of heriot——"

"Excuse me, Mr. Pearman; that I can't touch upon. I have put myself completely in my nephew's hands regarding that subject; but I will send him to you at once, and merely remark that any arrangement you may make with him has my cordial assent."

CHAPTER XXI.

Grenville Rose, meanwhile, had early cognisance of Pearman's arrival, and prepared at once for the encounter. He first ordered a horse to be saddled, and a groom to be in readiness to take a message to Xminster. Next he summoned his cousin to come to him in his uncle's sanctum.

"Maude, dearest," he said, as she entered "the crisis of our fate is at hand."

"What is it Gren?" And the grey eyes opened wide as she saw the grave, earnest look upon her lover's face.

"Pearman is here, and your father is gone to see him. But in a few minutes I shall be sent for. I'm playing for a great stake this morning, Maude; to wit, the freeing your father from his difficulties, and to win your own sweet self for mine own love. Listen. James has got a horse all ready to go for me to Xminster. You see these telegram sheets: I shall come here for one minute, and fill one up with a message. Mind James has it, and is off with it at once. You see he does not linger. It is of the utmost consequence to us."

"I understand, Gren. Anything more?"

"Yes; you may as well write Pearman a polite dismissal, unless you would rather see him."

"Oh, no! I'd rather write."

"Well, then do so at once; and I think there will be no necessity for your seeing him. But if you must"—and he looked a little anxiously towards her.

"I shall know what to say—don't be afraid of that—though I would much rather not."

Here Harold Denison entered the room, jubilant and triumphant.

"The overture is played out, Grenville, and the real business of the piece is about to begin. I've told him you are my representative in this matter, and that I am entirely in your hands."

"Thanks, uncle."

And Rose went off to encounter Pearman. He found that gentleman restlessly pacing the library. A curt greeting passed between them.

"Now, Mr. Rose, we had better proceed to business at once. Time is valuable to me upon this occasion."

"The sooner the better," rejoined Grenville.

"Since I last saw you I have been to town in connection with this affair, and am prepared to admit that you have a better case than I at first thought you possessed. Under these circumstances, and standing as I do with regard to Miss Denison——"

"Hadn't we better confine ourselves solely to the business in hand, and not advert to contingencies that may never happen?" interrupted Grenville, quietly.

"That's it, then?" said Pearman coarsely. "Miss Denison intends cancelling her engagement, as part of the program? I thought as much."

"Excuse me if I suggest the propriety of keeping Miss Denison's name entirely out of our conversation. That is a matter upon which I have nothing to say. The question lies in a nutshell. Do you intend to ransom your horse, or is that writ of service, of which you received notice yesterday, to be carried into effect?"

"I shall dispute the whole thing, and place the affair in the hands of my solicitors."

"Very good. Under these circumstances it is only right to tell you that I have already applied for an injunction to prevent your running Coriander for any race till the case is decided."

"Ridiculous! Upon what grounds, pray?"

"Upon the grounds of possible injury, and probable deterioration of value."

"What do you mean?"

"What I say. He might be injured, or he might be beat; in either case, he would not be so valuable a horse as he is now."

Pearman said nothing for a minute or two; at last he exclaimed abruptly, "Do you ever bet, Mr. Rose?"

"Certainly not!" was the Jesuitical reply; for, though Grenville Rose never did meddle with turf matters, though he had not made a single bet on the forthcoming "Two Thousand," he was yet aware that Dallison was betting for him; albeit he neither knew nor cared to know, so far, the particulars of the transaction.

"You can hardly suppose I shall pay such a sum as £10,000. Perhaps you will state what compromise you really intend to offer me?"

"I have none other to propose, than that you sign Mr. Denison a release of the mortgage you hold to that amount upon Glinn."

"Ah, well! I am afraid you price the horse a little too high."

"Not at all! We value the horse at £5,000, and the stakes of the 'Two Thousand' at £5,000 more."

"And who tells you he is going to win that race?"

"Well, you see," rejoined Grenville, smiling, "we are guided there entirely by your own opinion. We are credibly informed that you have thought it worth while to invest a large sum of money on his chance, and we have a high opinion of your judgment in such matters."

WALL STREET'S LAMB.

Disaster Follows Playing a Game of Which One Knows Nothing.

The lamb who thinks he can filch money out of Wall street is permitted to succeed in his operations only until he has enough to make it worth the while for a professional to get up and take it from him, says a writer in Everybody's. What possible chance has a gambler in such a game as this? Would he play poker with no chance of seeing the cards dealt, or of knowing how many cards his opponents draw, and with more than a suspicion that the cards are marked? Yet he does worse than that when he deals in stocks on a margin through the New York stock exchange. Does he ever realize that the winnings in the game played there depend on his own losses, and that the broker who receives his money on margin knows, not thinks, nor suspects, but knows, that in the end he will inevitably join the great majority before him who have played and lost?

"If it were not against the rules of the New York stock exchange," exclaimed the head of a legitimate brokerage house, "I'd bucket every order I took."

"Do you mean to say that your customers are more likely to be wrong than right in their guesses?" was the surprised question of Mr. Lamb.

"Sure," was the reply, with an indulgent smile of superior wisdom on the frank, open face of the broker. "A speculator on margin is not only likely to lose, he is sure to lose. Of course he sometimes wins, gets on the right side of the market, and in a day or two walks off with $20,000 in his jeans. Do you think he stays away? Not much! That was too easy; and the next time he loses his $20,000 of winnings and as much more besides as he'll stand for or can raise. Why, this business we're in is pure gambling and we're not one whit better than Dick Canfield."

Remember, please, that the speaker was not a bucket shop man, nor yet a crank reformer, but the head of a legitimate New York stock exchange house, with thousands of customers, and he knew the game from beginning to end.

TAFT IN TARIFF PLEA

President, in Message, Asks Congress to Revise Philippine Revenue System.

PAYNE BILL FORCES CHANGE

Recommendations of Secretary Dickinson and Gen. Edwards Are Transmitted with Act.

The President sent to Congress a special message in relation to the Philippine tariff. The message transmits recommendations by the Secretary of War for a revision of the Philippine tariff so as to permit as much customs revenue as possible for the islands and at the same time to extend to the islands the principle of a protective tariff for its industries.

Under the conditions which will arise from the enactment of the tariff bill pending in Congress, which provides under certain conditions for free trade between the Philippines and the United States, the revenues of th island will be considerably affected, and numerous protests have been received here on this account. The proposed amendments to the bill are to interfere as little as possible with these free-trade conditions and at the same time permit collection of ample revenue. The message and accompanying letters of recommendation from Secretary Dickinson and General Clarence R. Edwards, chief of the insular bureau of the War Department, with a copy of the proposed act, were submitted to both houses of Congress shortly after they convened.

General speaking, the bill submitted by the President makes a slight increase in the rates of duty now provided in the Philippine tariff, but its framers say its tendency is to insure, as far as practicable, the benefit of the Philippines market for American manufactures and products. The bill makes some additions to the free list. There will be an increase in internal-revenue duties, by which it is hoped to make up the loss which the Philippine Islands will sustain by the operations of the free-trade provisions in the pending Payne tariff bill. The internal-revenue laws for the Philippines are enacted by the Philippine assembly.

President Taft's Message.

"To the Senate and House of Representatives: I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War inclosing one from the chief of the bureau of insular affairs, in which is transmitted a proposed tariff-revision law for the Philippine Islands.

"This measure revises the present Philippine tariff, simplifies it and makes it conform as nearly as possible to the regulations of the customs laws of the United States, especially with respect to packing and packages. The present Philippine regulations have been cumbersome and difficult for American merchants and exporters to comply with. Its purpose is to meet the new conditions that will arise under the section of the pending United States tariff bill, which provides, with certain limitations, for free trade between the United States and the islands. It is drawn with a view to preserving to the islands as much customs revenue as possible and to protect in a reasonable measure those industries which now exist in the islands.

"The bill now transmitted has been drawn by a board of tariff experts, of which the insular collector of customs, Col. George R. Colton, was the president. The board held a great many open meetings in Manila and conferred fully with representatives of all business interests in the Philippine Islands. It is of great importance to the welfare of the islands that the bill should be passed at the same time with the pending Payne bill, with special reference to the provisions of which it was prepared.

"I respectfully recommend that this bill be enacted at the present session of Congress as one incidental to and required by the passage of the Payne bill.

"WILLIAM H. TAFT."

FAMILY IS THIN BLOODED.

Many Members Bleed to Death After Little Mishaps.

Gerald, the youngest son of Edward Lower of Tyrone, Pa., accidentally cut his mouth by falling on a tin toy, and in spite of all that medical aid could do he bled to death. This is the family's third child that has bled to death in three years. Ralph, age 2 years, fell down a flight of stairs and received a small cut on his face. The flow of blood could not be stopped and he died. A year ago Jessie, aged 2 years, fell and cut her head on the sharp edge of a wooden block. She also bled to death. Physicians say that the Lower family's blood is in such a condition that it fails to coagulate when it comes in contact with the air. Four other relatives of the Lower family have bled to death.

SMUGGLERS NOW OFFER $260,000

Loeb Rejects Second Proposal to Stop the Customs Prosecution.

"Call off the investigation of recent smuggling and we will pay the United States government $260,000." This offer, sent through intermediaries in such a manner that it cannot be traced to its source, was made the other day to William Loeb, Jr., collector of the port of New York. It came from the smugglers who tried to bring into the United States, without paying duty, many thousands of dollars' worth of Paris gowns and laces within the past few weeks. Mr. Loeb refused the offer, just as he had refused an offer of $100,000 made by the smugglers several days ago. It indicated in his mind that the smuggling syndicate was desperate and that only a small portion, perhaps, of their operations had been uncovered.

Work of Congress

Shortly after the Senate met Thursday it agreed to a resolution of the House of Representatives asking that the tariff bill be returned to that body so it might be amended to place upon the free list the products of, as well as crude and refined petroleum. The bill was soon returned to the Senate with this amendment inserted. The President's message for a revision of the Philippine tariff so that the principle of protection might be applied to the industries of those islands, and at the same time in view of practical free trade with the United States, sufficient revenue might be provided, was laid before the Senate and referred to the committee on the Philippines. Senator Bailey introduced an amendment placing a tax of 3 per cent on incomes of over $5,000 annually, which, he said, would provide a revenue of from $60,000,0000 to $80,000,000 annually. The House was in session but ten minutes. The principal business transacted was the reception and reference to committee of a message from the President transmitting the proposed tariff revision law of the Philippine Islands. At 12:10 p. m., adjournment was taken until Monday.

-:—:-

The tariff debate was opened in the Senate Monday when Senator Aldrich reviewed at length the pending measure which had been reported from the committee on finance. He received practically no interruption throughout his remarks, which were listened to, not only by every Senator, but by Speaker Cannon and members of the House of Representatives, who visited the chamber for that purpose. Senator Daniel, the senior minority member of the committee on finance, followed Senator Aldrich and laid down the general line of opposition that will be made to the pending measure by the Democrats. He also received careful attention. The House received the report of the conference committee on the census bill, but on account of the absence of a quorum failed to act upon it. After being in session for only five minutes, the House adjourned until Thursday.

-:—:-

The census bill was Tuesday sent back to conference by the Senate in order that its amendments relating to the civil service law and requiring the construction of a building for the work of the census in Washington might be further considered and insisted upon. The conferees had agreed to strike out the Senate amendment requiring domicile in a State for one year as a prerequisite for the establishment of residence as a basis for apportionment of appointments among the several States, but they were instructed to insist upon this provision. Senator Stone spoke at length in favor of free trade with the Philippine Islands and for independence of the islands within a time to be agreed upon. The House was not in session.

Child Man Growing at Last.

Harry Needleman, the 27-year-old man who for lack of a thyroid gland had not developed in body or mind beyond the state of a small boy, and who was operated on in a New York hospital in February, has just been returned to his home, well started on the road to manhood at last. In the one month since the operation he has gained 2 inches in height and has shown many signs of a mental awakening also. The treatment consisted of a dose three times a day of a powder made of the thyroid glands of sheep. It is supposed to be slowly but surely supplying the missing organ at the top of the boy's windpipe. A peculiarity of the treatment is that he must continue to take the thyroid as long as he lives or he will again stop growing.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

In the sustained high volume of payments through the banks and improvement in credits the business conditions are encouraging. High prices for breadstuffs and labor disputes are temporary cross-currents, and leading retail lines require more seasonable weather for an ample reduction of merchandise, but manufacturing makes some progress, freight transportation increases and agriculture has started with an excellent outlook.

Metal and woodworking gather strength from the wider demands for supplies, and iron producers have less difficulty in negotiating contracts for future deliveries, although no specially large individual tonnages appear in the bookings.

Increasing inquiries impart a better tone to railway equipment, forge and foundry operations. Rail mills in this district have accumulated much forward work, while the orders have more breadth for plates, pipe and merchant shapes.

Some gain is noted in new demands for furniture, including export orders and the outputs extend in boxmaking and planing mill materials.

Earnings of the Chicago steam roads exhibit further gains while freight offerings increase in heavy materials factory products grain and general merchandise.

Farm reports testify to rapid advance in spring work, more acreage being prepared and the winter wheat and rye do well with higher temperatures and moisture.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 21, against 21 last week, 21 in 1908 and 17 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 5, against 4 last week, 6 in 1908, and 9 in 1907. —Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Weather, crop and industrial reports are still very irregular, rendering general characterization difficult. Taken as a whole, there is, however, a slightly larger business doing, this being particularly true of retail trade in sections where weather permits and in bookings for fall and winter delivery at wholesale.

In portions of the South and in the East generally there is more confident purchasing, higher prices for cotton aiding in the former instance, while the advance of the season helps trade along the Atlantic seaboard. Business on the Pacific coast has expanded slightly, particularly in California. In the central West trade at retail is expanding slowly and a rather better business is reported with country merchants, but jobbing activity is not as pronounced as it was some weeks ago.

Industry is in a rather spotted condition. There is more doing in iron and steel, but largely, it is claimed, at the expense of prices. The improvement noted in the cotton goods industry is maintained. Prices of staple goods are firm. There is more doing in silk manufacturing. Women's wear woolen goods are in good request and worsted goods and yarns are strong, reflecting the continued firmness in raw wool.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with April 15 were 201, against 227 last week, 261 in the like week of 1908, 167 in 1907, 167 in 1906 and 183 in 1905. The week's failures in Canada number 27, which compares with 38 last week and 25 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's Commercial Report.

The ominous reports of disturbances in various parts of the Turkish Empire should not be taken too seriously. There is abundant room and opportunity for exaggeration, and there are those who are interested in such misrepresentation.

We think the determination of President Gomez to build up an effective army in Cuba in wholly praiseworthy. The downfall of the Palma government was caused by the lack of military power, or at least this contributed largely to it, and no such premium should again be put upon the tendency of discontented Cuban politicians to take to the bush.

So far as can be learned President Taft is satisfied with the progress of the tariff legislation and is confident that a good bill will be the final outcome, but we notice that he declines to commit himself one way or the other, for publication at least. Doubtless he takes the stand that his turn has not yet come, that it is still "up to Congress."

Announcement is made that the National Association of Master Bakers are preparing to make a great protest to Congress against speculation in food products, due to the wheat corner at Chicago, which has forced the price of flour up so far that the business of bakers is said to be jeopardized. This association, with a membership of about three thousand, embraces not only the most prosperous bakers in the United States, but also bakers' supply houses and millers.

We quite agree with the sentiment said to have been expressed recently by John Burroughs, the naturalist, in his protest against those who rail at Mr. Roosevelt for shooting the animals of Africa, that "It is shameful the way the newspaper correspondents are nagging Mr. Roosevelt. I should say that he would have a perfect right to shoot the fellows who will endeavor to destroy the privacy and recreation that rightfully belong to him."

General business conditions continue to show steady recuperative power. With tariff revision promptitude, we ought soon to see the East joining heartily in the happier conditions dominant throughout the West. While in some quarters industrial developments are less encouraging than recently anticipated, there is agreeable contrast in mercantile purchases and mercantile traffic movement. There is nothing in sight in the financial world to warrant worry. The much talked of wheat "corner" seems, in the Wall Street view, to be no corner at all --- high prices for grain being due, more than to anything else, to an actual shortage of world supplies.

In his speech in the Senate, this week, on the pending tariff bill, Mr. Aldrich dealt chiefly with the problem of raising revenue. One of the most striking features of Mr. Aldrich's speech was his statement that the appropriations made last year could have been reduced at least $50,000,000 without impairing the efficiency of the public service. "There are periods in the life of a nation", he said, "when the spirit of extravagance pervades the atmosphere and the public money is scattered right and left, often without reference to the results to be secured. I hope and expect to see a radical reform in this direction. We have within the last few years created many unnecessary bureaus and multiplied employes beyond the possibility of efficient work". Mr. Aldrich declared he was authorized to say that in the work of reducing expenditures and reforming methods of appropriation the Senate would have the earnest support and active co-operation of the President and his administration. Is the Senate ready at last to reverse the precedent of generations and co-operate with the House of Representatives in reducing appropriations? We sincerely hope that it is. There is, as Senator Aldrich said, good ground for believing that the government's annual expenditure can be cut $50,000,000 without any great impairment of the efficiency of the public service.

Whatever you do, don't become a fanatic. Be honest with yourself also with your neighbor. Don't get the idea into your head that the world couldn't exist without you. There are people in St. Joe who act as though they own the earth, and treat others with cold contempt, when, in fact, those who are under the withering and humiliating treatment of the puffed-up toads are greatly superior in every respect and do a great deal more for the community. If this hits hard digest it and see if it fits your case.

You'd scarcely expect one of my age, in merchandising to engage and hope to get a paying trade without the local paper's ad. And yet I did that very thing; I opened up a store last spring—this month the sheriff took my stock and sold it at the auction block. Don't view me with a scornful eye, but simply say as I pass by: "There goes a fool who seemed to think he had no use for printer's ink." There is a truth as broad as earth and business men should know its worth, 'tis simply this: The public buys its goods from those who advertise.—Polk (Neb.) Progress.

The Hicksville Tribune has purchased a Simplex type setting machine which will be installed as soon as the shipment is made thus allowing them to set more type and in fewer hours which will mean considerable to them. We are pleased to note this important change as we like to see our Brother Craftsmen advance in their work and make it as easy as possible, as it is a trying business at the best. We don't begrudge Bro. Schell his new piece of machinery but hope it will be of great benefit to his work as he is a hard working man and deserves the hearty support of his people.

The following is a clipping taken from a circular received from Mr. E. L. Coburn, who is well and favorably known in this community:—

"Tuesday evening, May 4th, at 8:15 p. m. Young People's orchestral and choral concert, including New York Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Walter Damrosch, Conductor; Madame Corinne Rider Kelsey, Madame Nevada Van der Veer, Mr. Reed Miller, Herr Gustav Holmquist, soloists. These choruses will be directed by and trained under the direct supervision of E. L. Coburn, supervisor of music for the public schools of St. Louis. The festival will close with the singing of the national anthem, the "Star Spangled Banner," led by Mr. Walter Damrosch, the New York Symphony Orchestra, the combined giant choruses of twenty-five hundred school children and joined by the entire audience".

Lawyer Rose Dies

All Auburn mourns. James E. Rose is no more. He passed away at his home on Tuesday morning of last week, after a short illness. Though dead, his many acts of kindness, his sunny disposition, his cordial greeting will live as long as those who knew him survive. These are pleasant recollections, they will do us good in the future when life looks dark for he always looked upon the happy side casting gloom to the four winds and when we think of this admirable trait of his, it will encourage us to emulate his example. We honor his memory, we sympathize with those who are today at his fireside. As a citizen he was honored and respected and loved by all for his noble traits of character, his uprightness, his courageous position on all questions and his many sterling qualities. He lived for more than three score years in Auburn, and was one of the early vanguards of civilization in this county. These years have been years of usefulness, of activity, of energetic action. He lived a temperate life, he loved his home and enjoyed no hours more than those spent in the family circle. He was one of Indiana's foremost citizens, a lawyer keen and forceful, honest and truthful, able and conscientious. He stood at the head of his profession, he was successful in its practice and always enjoyed the fullest confidence of his co-members at the bar and of his large clientele.

About three years ago the Baltimore, and Ohio and Chicago railroad company wanted a man from Indiana on their directorate and selected Mr. Rose. This was an unusual honor, it showed the confidence the men in charge of this company had in the integity, and business ability of the deceased and at the time of his death he was one of the directors of this company. His political affiliations have been with the republican party since arriving at his majority. He was present at the meeting under the oaks at Jackson, Michigan, when the republican party was given birth.

In 1873, he united with the Presbyterian church and remained a faithful member until called to his eternal resting place. The funeral was conducted from the Presbyterian church on Friday afternoon at 2:30, Rev. W. M. Elliott, the pastor, officiating.

Compromising a Tenor.

Czar Nicholas I. used to walk the streets of St. Petersburg alone wrapped in a large gray cloak. It was forbidden to speak to him, but the czar sometimes forgot that a subject could not obey the prohibition if the emperor addressed him.

Once the czar met in a park the tenor singer of the Italian opera and exchanged a few words with him. The moment the czar was out of sight the police arrested the tenor. That evening the czar attended the opera, where, after a long delay, the manager announced that the tenor could not be found. Nicholas guessed what had happened and sent an aid-de-camp to release the singer.

A few days after the czar again met the tenor and began with an apology:

"I was very sorry"—

"May I implore your majesty," the Italian exclaimed, "not to speak to me? Your majesty will compromise me with the police."

The Poultry Yard.

A happy hen will make a happy master.

Do not overfeed the growing chicks, or they may become stunted.

Don't wait until young poultry begin to droop and die before looking for lice.

When you have set all the eggs you care to for the season, send the roosters to market. Their room is better than their company.

It is a waste of time and power—hen-power—to try to hatch eggs that have really been chilled by the hen leaving the nest.

The faithful hen will stay with her eggs until fairly eaten alive with mites. Do take time to give sitters attention; keep lice down, if something else must be neglected.

When a hard shower comes up the foolish young ducklings need attention. I have known them to stand out in the rain with heads up and mouths open until they drowned.

Hens have a way of settling disputes over a nest that often results in scrambled eggs. The hen that is given a setting of choice eggs should be set where there will be no trouble with other hens.

When my fowls get the egg-eating habit, I find a dose of oyster shells to be the "eggs-act" remedy. Give them enough the first time to cause them to gorge themselves. This has cured some bad cases.

Are you coming in?

If the nest is too flat, the eggs are sure to roll out from under the hen; and if too deep, the eggs will pile on top of each other and get broked.

Did you ever watch a hen just after you had put some nice clean straw in the nest boxes? Hear her talk about it when she climbs in to lay her egg. She knows the difference and is happier than when the straw was dirty and had lice in it.

The Raven.

Many birds seek the protection which the presence of man affords against furred and feathered foes when the breeding season approaches. Not so the raven. Its distrust of us is profound, and its nest is placed in some wild spot far out of reach of our possible attack or succor. But there are other enemies. I know of a pair that built on one side of a projecting crag high up on the cliffs of Rathlin island. Some fierce peregrine falcons occupied the other side of the crag, and when one day their eggs were taken by an adventurous collector they, sharing the popular opinion of a raven's blackness, concluded that their neighbors were the offenders and wreaked their grief and vengeance upon them. When, on their return from a foraging expedition, the falcons found their nest despoiled they were seen to hold a consultation, and after much deliberation they suddenly arose and both with one accord flew at the ravens' nest and sacked it, tearing it in their rage and indignation until not one stick was left upon another.—London Standard.

Stop Smoking to Enjoy It Better.

An excellent plan for smokers is to abstain from time to time—that is, fast from all tobacco, say, for weeks or a month at a time. This method enables the smoker to enjoy his smoke more when he goes back to it and is less harmful to his health.

"It is a fine scheme," said one man. "When I stop for a month I am equipped with the keenest relish and liking for a good cigar at the end of that month. I am rested, refreshed, recuperated—in pocket too. Thus I show that I am master of my habit, and not mastered by it. I have been doing this way for a long time now and I heartily recommend my plan to all smokers. I do not limit myself to any number of cigars while in one of my smoking months, but simply smoke at will, and then absolutely quit until another month is through."—Baltimore American.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE LIVING TRUTH.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom."—Prov. iii., 13.

Christianity is not a system of belief, it is a type of life, a trend in ideals. There will be always those who insist on its forms as constituting its essentials. This is because it is so much easier to stand by certain fixed forms than it is to keep pace with an ever developing ideal, especially since that ideal makes many practical demands upon you.

The fact that your religious ideas seem to you often hazy, uncertain, and unstable need not be a source of uneasiness, gives no ground upon which the self-satisfied formalist can impeach your faith and ought rather to suggest that this is always the condition of ideas which have in them the elements of life, which are developing and which produce development.

One might have the characteristics of Christianity and still deny the reliability of some details and narratives of the historic faith. It would be possible to have this faith and be uncertain as to many things that some of its friends insist on as fundamental. It is also evidently possible to hold with tenacity and pugnacity the forms of those alleged fundamental facts and still be utterly devoid of the essential spirit.

Many a man is a pragmatist who has never heard of Prof. James and still more are Kantians or Hegelians who would not only deny any knowledge of the great philosophers, but would also deny absolutely the philosophies if they heard them stated in the precise forms of their founders. The most radical motives of our lives become unrecognizable as soon as we stop to analyze them.

The more effective a man's faith and ideals are the more illusive they will be. Only the dead can be classified here. The greater the virtue in shaping conduct and the vitality in causing progress and development the greater the difficulty in formulating your faith. If you tarry by the wayside to describe your ideal it escapes you, either vanishing altogether or moving further on.

The man who can carry his creed in his cabinet, who can count its pieces, with whom it never varies, neither developing nor dying because it is already dead, usually feels superiority over those with whom faith is living, growing, an ideal, an ever changing hope and an overmastering passion. It is the superiority which a child, happy with its toys, yet happy with his hope or dreams.

The religion that never changes in itself is powerless to effect change in us. Few sights are more pitiable than that of the man who deludes himself with the hope of saving the world by persuading all men to hold in their hands sets of symbols precisely like the one he holds, pieces of the garments and forms through which truth once revealed herself to the eyes of men, shreds from which the soul has fled.

When we talk of the faith of our fathers we need to remember that their faith meant so much to them because is was fresh and living, because they wrested it with blood and tears, from its old forms, from the grip of a traditionalism that would have throttled it, that each new generation must see yet farther along the path of light and be loyal to the truth of the past by leaving its old tracks for the truth of the present.

The most serious heresy of any age is that which calls itself orthodoxy, the attempt to bind back the new life in the shells of the old, to substitute the footprints that the development of truth has made yesterday for the onward moving truth itself and to force all into uniform and meaningless repetition of outgrown phases.

The harm of this lies in the facts that such mechanical uniformity stifles originality, makes faith perfunctory, robs it of vitality, and so of any virtue in life. It substitutes for the struggle onward into our new and enlarging ideas the slothful settling down to content with old forms. It brands as a bad man him who honestly strives forward into light and commends the dolt and coward who timorously clings to the past.

The danger is that we shall be discouraged in our own strivings after truth and our own passion for the heaven soaring ideal by the vehement threats and taunts of those who love so well the easily gotten forms of traditions. We must be loyal to the best we know; we must have the faith that says: "Give me rather perdition with truth than paradise at the price of a lie."

SIGNIFICANCE IN EASTER.

By Rev. Percy Trafford Olton.

We stand beside the empty tomb on Easter Sunday morning and listen to the message of the angel. What does it mean? Does it simply record a fact in history? Human interest is in that which it to happen, rather than in that which has happened.

We may consider the resurrection of Christ a well attested, credible fact in history; the keystone of the Christian religion; the supreme witness of the immortality of the soul. But there it stands — unconnected, distinct, apart from our own personal life. We have never made it the keystone of our own personal faith in Jesus Christ; we have never wove it into the very fibre of our life as a child of God. It is for us a historical event; an article of the Christian faith; an argument for the life beyond the grave.

And some may ask. "What more can be desired?" It would seem as if one had reached the circumference and had grasped the full value of the message of Easter when such a confession had been made. There is something more, however, for on Easter Sunday we are not simply commemorating an event; we are sharing in an experience; we are not simply adding an article to our creed, we are partaking of the power of a new life; ye are not simply finding an argument for immortality, we are entering into the joy of the life eternal.

The deep significance of this Easter day does not lie in its pointing us back to a certain time and a certain place and reminding us that at that time and in that place Christ rose from the dead. The true meaning of Easter is that to-day and now Christ is gaining the victory for us and the message of the angel is bringing joy and new life to the hearts that are dead in trespasses and sin. Wherever a human soul goes to seek a crucified Jesus and finds instead a risen Savior, the event of day is repeated and the joy of the angelic message is shared once again. The real power of the resurrection lies in the spiritual experience, not in the historical fact.

SERMONETTES.

No hatred is so cruel as that which is based on conscience.

Unfitness for death does not establish fitness for heaven.

One does not acquire a forgiving spirit by practicing on himself.

Sin has many machines, but selfishness is the motor for them all.

Worshiping the milestones does not hasten progress along the way.

A man's mocking at money has little meaning if he has no means.

The highest exhibition of religion may come in the lowliest deeds.

Of all the devil's disguises the worst is that which lust steals from love.

Excessive emphasis on a few ideas is evidence of the absence of many.

Only the weakling fears either to fight his thoughts or to follow them.

The honesty of our cries for justice is seen in our attitude to be helpless.

The church is sure to be only foolishness to those who go there as fans.

Much of our reasoning is a blotting out of the stars by shutting our eyes.

You never know how much patience a man has until he has power over others.

No wheels are turned in this world by the man who is proud of those in his head.

No matter what his titles, he is a slave who lets his belly run away with his head.

A man's riches on earth are in inverse ratio to his retrenchments toward humanity.

You cannot tell much about the size of a man's living from the size of his income.

The breadth of a life depends on how much of the world it takes into its heart.

It's no use inviting folks to the heavenly way when you walk as if it were all thorns.

To pray to be delivered from our trials would be to seek escape from our triumphs.

Many a man who complains that conscience is silent hires a megaphone for his appetites.

Too many think they have fed the hungry when they have told them how to make an omelette.

No amount of praying for your children will do any good if you are too busy to play with them.

Our impressions of our own knowledge are apt to be in inverse proportion to our actual possessions.

Many a man counts his life a success when its freedom from failure is due to absence of endeavor.

If your head aches from the creeds there is always a cure in physical weariness from good deeds.

There are many who cannot bear to see a mouse killed who are experts at stabbing one another in the back.

Forming the Fabric.

God furnishes the warp in our time, our days, our life. We ourselves are filling in the woof—our deeds, our daily acts and conduct, our thoughts, our desires, our aspirations, our motives, our purposes and resolves, these all go to make up the firmly woven texture of the fabric we are constantly forming.—Rev. Samuel Dunham, Presbyterian, Binghamton.

Vim.

The battle is not always to the strong, but the man who gets ahead in this world is the man who plugs. If I had 40 boys, I wouldn't want a single one of them to be a genius. I would want the whole bunch to be good, hard-working pluggers. I like—and the world likes—a man with vim. —Rev. L. G. Herbert, Presbyterian, Findlay, Ohio.

Her Husband—But, of course, if I hadn't been as big a fool as I was I wouldn't have married.

Nightmares.

Hubby—Yes. Isn't it a dream?

Wifey—Maybe it is, but if I had dreams like that I would be sending for the doctor.

The Fragrant Onion.

"Why, Mary," said Mrs. Sniffem, "you have been eating onions."

"Sure, ma'am," replied Mary, "an' Oi niver know'd yez wer a mind reader."—Jugend.

Wasn't That Slick?

The usual crowd of small boys was gathered about the entrance of a circus tent in a small town, pushing and trying to get a glimpse of the interior. A man standing near watched them for a few moments, then walking up to the ticket taker he said with an air of authority:

"Let all these boys in, and count them as they pass."

The gentleman did as requested, and when the last one had gone he turned and said: "Twenty-eight, sir."

"Good," said the man, smiling as he walked away, "I thought I guessed right."—Exchange.

Had No Kick Coming.

Harker—I say, Parker, you seem to take life pretty easy; you must have a good salary.

Parker—Yes, pretty fair. My salary is $1,200 a year. I save $100 and run into debt $700—that's $2,000 all told, and if a bachelor can't live on that he ought to be ashamed of himself.

As Defined.

"Father," said the minister's little daughter, "the paper says you 'officiated at the wedding clad in the traditional garb of the clergy.' What does 'traditional' mean?"

"'Traditional,' my dear," answered the good man as he looked at his cheap suit of black with a sigh, "refers to something that has been handed down."

Educational Disadvantages.

Pa—When I was a boy I worked my way through college. You get your education under advantages these days.

Son—Not much. We have the whole police force to contend with.—Cornell Widow.

Incompetent.

"Everything ready for raiding that gambling joint?"

"Yes, sir."

"Warned the proprietor, I suppose?"

In After Life.

"He'll never amount to anything, writing the poetry that he does."

"It will be a blessing if he don't amount to anyhing. Then nobody will have any occasion to dig up them poems."—Washington Herald.

An Insinuation.

Said She—Yes; but she runs an awful risk.

Said He—Risk of what?

Said She—Of contracting painter's colic.

The Feminine Definition.

Mrs. Blecker—Mrs. Blank certainly possesses a lot of tact.

Mrs. Meeker—What is your definition of "tact?"

Mrs. Blecker—Tact is a woman's ability to make her husband believe he is having his own way.

Insignificant.

Magistrate—Did you arrest the prisoner, McNutty?

Cheerful.

"What happened to me?" asked the chronic optimist when he woke up in the hospital.

Cook—A glass of muddy water sets itself is allowed to stand.

WORTH QUOTING

London's suffragettes occasionally show a disposition to infringe on Carrie Nation's copyright, protests the Washington Star.

Hetty Green says she got rich minding her own business. The recipe is worth trying, anyway, declares the Harrisburg Telegraph.

At least President Eliot is no reactionist remarks the New York World. There is all the vigor of the original kick in his final report on too strenuous football.

Great privileges and novel opportunities have been thrown in the way of this generation. The most important question, says the Christian Register, is, Are we producing and can we produce men and women who measure up to the moral stature demanded by the time?

Said Abraham Lincoln:: "I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right, stand with him while he is right and part with him when he goes wrong."

Some of the best medical experts of the present time decry the "filth theory of disease," but, after all, contends the New York Press, if cleanliness is not next to godliness it is at least next door to sanitation, and while the house fly and the mosquito are guilty creatures and have probably killed their millions before now, the little unseen microbe which comes up with the fetid exhalations from the swamp must not be forgotten. He needs no fly or mosquito to carry his virus.

Perhaps the term "dog-fall" would not be understood by the British suffragettes; it describes, nevertheless, the latest development of their struggle with sufficient accuracy, relates the Louisville Courier-Journal. By a vote of 157 to 122 the House of Commons passed a bill enfranchising every man and woman over 21 years of age who had resided in one constituency for three months. The bill was then referred to the committee of the whole House, or, as one might say, tabled.

The American Museum of Natural History has acquired two new meteorites, one from Kansas and one from Colorado. The Kansas one is a fragment, weighing 20½ pounds and "composed of stone with a slight mixture of iron and a thin metallic coating." Of the Colorado one we are told: "It weighs 700 pounds and is three feet in length. It has a plentiful plating of nickel and it shone so that the two prospectors who found it thought surely they had found a great silver nugget."

The possibility that the world may hereafter be less dependent than it has been hitherto on the Bohemian deposits of pitchblende is one of the reasons for rejoicing over the discovery in Cornwall, observes the New York Tribune. The use of radium for curative and other purposes has been sadly hampered by the scarcity and high price of this wonderful product. The establishment of new works for its manufacture may well be attended with several happy results. There is promise not only of an increased supply, but also of lower quotations. Possibly a way may be found to simplify the process of separation and materially lessen its cost. A fresh stimulus will undoubtedly be given too, to the study of methods of utilising minerals which contain radium in microscopic quantities, and to the search for yet undiscovered deposits.

Salting a Diamond Mine.

Howard DuBois, the noted mining engineer, told a good story to the Tech men recently illustrating the "art" of salting a diamond mine. The story was told of a man in South Africa who while walking one day over his property suggested that they assay some of the soil.

In the search that ensued eight rough diamonds were found and offers began to fly through the air at a rapid rate for the land, when the host's wife called out to her husband, "Why, John, where are the other two?" The sequel of the story was left to the imagination.—Boston Record.

Girl, Record Cotton Picker.

Miss Margaret Montgomery, a farmer's daughter, near Stillwater, is by long odds the champion cotton picker in Oklahoma, and probably in the whole country.

One day last fall she picked 700 pounds of cotton. Miss Montgomery is 23 years old, was born on a farm in Chautauqua county, Kan. She is a musician, and such an accomplished horsewoman that she won first prize in the ladies' riding race at the Payne county fair last fall.

MAN'S GOLDEN AGE.

His Best Achievements Not in the Past, but in the Future.

The old theologians were gloomy in the contemplation of the future of mankind. They could not see much in the days ahead except unhappiness and pain. Whether the trouble lay in reading the mournful but magnificently beautiful words of Job, or whether in the times there was a poison of hopelessness, none of us may more than guess.

The scientific people have been doing a great amount of overstudying of the face of the globe in recent years, the Toledo Blade says, experimenting, turning over ancient dust heaps and cleaning up cave debris. The total age of the world is somewhere in the neighborhood of 72,000,000 years, a few million either way, of course, being no matter over which any spectacled professors would come to blows. The human race began to accomplish things for itself which may be counted of value about 2,000 years back. The best it has done is within the last 200 years.

So the man is but an infant in his life's history. His great work, his achievements, his glory and his grandeur are ahead of him. The golden age is not buried in some distant past, but is a heritage into which he has not yet come. These views of the scientific world hardly agree with those who find all that is good, all that is attractive to them in the records of the Greeks and the Romans. There is warfare between the two schools of thought. For you it is permitted to take up with either party, or accept them both, as occasion and mood direct.

FOOD FACTS.

What an M. D. Learned.

A prominent Georgia physician went through a food experience which he makes public:

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food and I also know, from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients that the food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and sick patients always gain just as I did in strength and weight very rapidly.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely, and went to the mountains of this state, but two months there did not improve me; in fact, I was not quite as well as when I left home.

"My food did not sustain me and it became plain that I must change. Then I began to use Grape-Nuts food, and in two weeks I could walk a mile without fatigue, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers, I consider it a duty to make these facts public."

Trial 10 days on Grape-Nuts, when the regular food does not seem to sustain the body, will work miracles.

"There's a Reason."

The model shown here would be very good for a foulard, either plain or figured. If plain material is used, then the neck and lower sleeves should be in an open work pattern in lace or batiste. If figured silk is used then make the neck and sleeves of net or chiffon cloth.

An old setting hen belonging to Charles Studabaker, near Travisville, Wells county, has displayed an unusual trait. When a cat gave birth a few days ago to four kittens, in the same manager in the stable where the hen was setting, the biddy left her eggs and adopted the four kittens.

Mrs. Francis Bundy Baker has filed suit at Wabash against her father, Camillus Bundy, one of the last of the Miami Indians. She is seeking to recover ground which was once the home of the Indians. She alleges that an etsate was left her and that her father transferred to her a farm which he now refuses to surrender. Many of the witnesses will be Indians.

Che Hahr, a midget, sixty-one years old, and Miss Nora T. Cleveland, of Kingston, Pa., age forty-one, were married at Knox a few days ago. Mahr is twenty-eight inches in height, and is said to be the smallest man in the world, and his bride is five feet six inches tall. The midget retired from the show business two years ago to look after his real estate interests.

Believing that the recent legislature passed a rat bounty bill, a young farmer drove to the home of Lawrence Montgomery, township trustee at Owensville, and handed over a box containing sixty-nine rat tails, for which he asked a bounty of 1 cent each. Trustee Montgomery explained that a bill of that character was introduced in the legislature by Representative Stevens of Gibson county, but that it was defeated. The farmer went away much disappointed.

John W. Adams, of Farmersburg, has a patent on a gasolene can in the way of a phonographic device. Whenever the cap is turned to unscrew, the phonograph says: "Gasolene—Explosive." By this means one can tell when he has the gasolene can, even in the dark. Mr. Adams says he has been offered $50,000 for the invention, but declines to sell. With this device perfect safety is obtained, as one can not make the mistake of placing gasolene in an oil lamp without knowing it.

Terre Haute is to have an old-fashioned celebration of the Fourth of July. The Terre Haute fraternity regiment composed of Uniform Rank companies of various fraternities is to have charge, and the Retail Merchant's Association has indorsed the project. An effort will be made to bring to the city the first batallion of the First Regiment, Indiana National Guard, companies from Vincennes, Washington and Princeton. There will be a sham battle at the fair grounds in the afternoon.

John Dellinger, who was one of the three victims of a mad dog at Jeffersonville a couple of weeks ago and is now undergoing treatment at the Pasteur Institute at Chicago with seven-year-old Lucile Lents and Mrs. Charlotte Phillips, will find, when he arrives home that neighbors have been attending to his farm for him. His chief anxiety, he wrote, was over his farm. Eleven neighbors, eight of them brother Masons, plowed up eighteen acres of land for him and gave other assistance on the place. Dellinger and the others are expected home soon.

The second victim of gasoline within a week was taken at Fort Wayne when Anna Ahgst, 24 years old, died two hours after being horribly burned in an explosion after she had poured gasoline into a coal oil stove.

Miss Virginia Hartley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Homer Hartley, of Peru, is in a critical condition, the result of burns she received by her clothes catching on fire from a gasoline stove.

George, the five year old son of David Russell of New Albany, wandered from home and fell from the traction line bridge over Silver creek and was drowned. The body was recovered.

A big trestle on the Southern railway, six miles west of Princeton, burned and only the fact that it was running slowly prevented a heavy freight train from dashing into it. Coals from an engine probably started the fire. It burned out about thirty feet.

George Kimmel, a farmer living about three miles east of Milton, has a young calf that is a freak of nature. The animal is about two weeks old. It is a steer and a fine, healthy animal, but has no tail. At the point from which the tail grows are to be seen two joints, but there is on sign of a tail.

Emanuel Schaefer, fifty-two years old, a retired farmer, of Logansport, was knocked down by a team of runaway colts, which were hitched to a plow, and his body was caught by the plow point and dragged for over a hundred yards. Almost disembowled, he lived for an hour, dying in terrible agony.

The "night riders" in Southern Daviess county are still active. One farmer, John Potter, received a threatening letter, mailed at Petersburg. It reads: "If you don't want to take the warning given you we will bother you no more until we take you out and tie a rock around your neck and throw you in the river."

The official board of the First M. E. church at Richmond has just passed a resolution asking that hereafter women of the congregaation remove their hats after seating themselves. So expansive are some of the spring shapes of hats and so profusely decorated are they that a view of the minister conducting services is almost wholly cut off to many in the audience.

When Representative Charles Stevens, of Gibson county, introduced in the recent legislature a bill calling for a bounty on rats, he won international fame. The proposed law was favorably discussed at the first annual meeting of the International Society for the Extermination of Vermin, held in London a few days ago. A rat bounty bill will probably be introduced in the English Parliament.

Mrs. John Rinard, sixty-eight years old, is dead at her home in Mooreland. Mrs. Rinard went into the barn lot to milk a cow and the animal, becoming suddenly enraged, attacked her. Her aged husband was standing close by, but before he could give her any assistance the animal had injured the woman beyond recovery. Mrs. Rinard died in a short time and before medical aid could be obtained.

Indianapolis millers are bidding $1.40 for wheat for delivery any time during April. This is the highest ever known there except by millers that have long memories. While it is estimated there are from 3,000,00 to 5,000,000 bushels of wheat left in Indiana, millers have not been able to find it with the bids they have been making. Some of those who have wheat intimate they might let the millers have it for $1.50 a bushel.

Manfred Ingram was buried by a sand cave-in, while working in a well twenty-five feet deep at Terre Haute Other men who were trying to release Ingram, before a second cave-in completely covered him, narrowly escaped his fate. It is probable that the coroner will investigate, as the men were digging a well through sand with no curbing until twenty-five feet down. Ingram was twenty-four years old, and is survived by a widow and one child.

Joseph Houston, sixty-three years old, son of James Housten, former minister to China, former district attorney of New York and congressman from that state, and who was the first manager of the Gary hotel when it opened in 1907, is under arrest in Chicago, charged with forging a postal money order. Housten, after a varied career, is now penniless and says poverty was the motive for his act. He has made a full confession of his guilt. While in Gary the tall, distinguished-looking man made many friends and proved one of the best hotel managers the city has had.

The first good pearl find of the season by the mussel diggers in the vicinity of Princeton is reported from Mt. Carmel, where Milton Iaun purchased for $300 a fine 27-grain pearl. It was found in the Wabash river.

Clement R. Corey, 76, was found dead in a path near Fairfield. He was the first county superintendent of schools at Brookville, and was also a representative in the state legislature four years ago. Death resulted from paralysis.

Had to Return the Frame.

Nat C. Goodwin attended a story-telling party not long ago, when he was reminded of the following:

"There was a young fellow in Chicago, the owner of a prosperous photographic business, who at Christmas presented a fine photo of himself with a magnificent frame to a young woman whom he much admired.

"When he next saw her, the young man inquired how she liked the work.

"'Oh,' she exclaimed, 'I'm afraid I shall have to send you back the frame; you know mother doesn't believe in a girl accepting valuable presents from young men.'"

WISHED FOR DEATH.

Sufferings from Kidney Troubles Were So Acute.

Mrs. Josephine Jeffery, 24th and Washington Sts., Marion, Ind., says: "To look back upon what I have gone through, it seems a miracle that I live, and I feel that I owe it to Doan's Kidney Pills. My case developed gradually. First, backache, floating spots before my eyes, weakness and exhaustion, then a terrible steady pain over the kidneys and an extreme nervousness. Doctors finally said there was no hope for me, but I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and gradualy recovered my health."

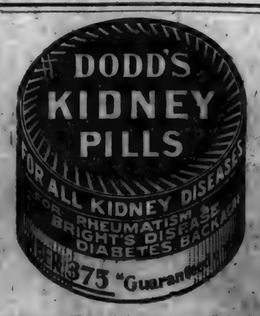
Politeness, Not Cruelty.

"Now, sir," bellowed the ruby-visaged K. C., taking off his pince-nez and pointing them at the unhappy husband, "you deny any cruelty toward your wife, I understand. Kindly tell us whether it is a fact"—here he turned triumphantly toward the jury, and put on his pince-nez again—"that for three months you did not speak to her."

"It is," answered the husband.

"Well, sir," thundered the K. C., "why didn't you speak to her, may I ask?"

"Simply," replied the husband, "because I didn't want to interrupt her."—Answers.



CURED ITCHING HUMOR.

Big, Painful Swellings Broke and Did Not Heal—Suffered Three Years—Tortures Yield to Cuticura.

"Little black swellings were scattered over my face and neck and they would leave little black scars that would itch so I couldn't keep from scratching them. Larger swellings would appear and my clothes would stick to the sores. I went to a doctor, but the trouble only got worse. By this time it was all over my arms and the upper part of my body in swellings as large as a dollar. It was so painful that I could not bear to lie on my back. The second doctor stopped the swellings, but when they broke the places would not heal. I bought a set of the Cuticura Remedies and in less than a week some of the places were nearly well. I continued until I had used three sets, and now I am sound and well. The disease lasted three years. O. L. Wilson, Puryear, Tenn., Feb. 8, 1908."

Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props. of Cuticura Remedies, Boston.

Only Did Their Duty.

Dr. Sven Hedin, the explorer, writes from Japan: "A fact that has often struck me is how little the Japanese think of the men who quite recently have written the history of the world with the point of their swords or the fire from the cannon. A month ago when we visited the Shinto temple raised to the memory of the hero Kusunoki in Kobe many of my friends said that when Admiral Togo dies such a temple is sure to be raised to him. But if, on the other hand, one expresses one's profound admiration of such men, hardly any one agrees, and for the reason that they consider that these men have only done their duty, that the fulfilment of duty is the most natural thing in the world and not worth wasting words over."

Western Canada's Happy Prospects.

In no year since the development of Western Canada began has spring brought a brighter outlook than it brings this year. In no preceding spring has there been greater assurance of advancing development and prosperity. The movement of immigration has already assumed large proportions, and is as desirable in character as it is satisfactory in volume; from across the Atlantic sturdy, industrious and thrifty newcomers are arriving in large numbers, homeseekers from Ontario and the other older provinces are coming in a steady stream, and from across the international boundary a movement is already in full flow which, it is confidently predicted, will beat the records of all previous years; special settlers' trains are crossing the line, loaded with effects, actual material wealth being thus brought into the country at the rate of millions of dollars' worth monthly.

The movement is so unprecedently large that extra Dominion Immigration officials have had to be provided at both North Portal and at Emerson, and it is estimated that the total number of new settlers from the United States this year will be 70,000 at least, and may run well up toward 100,000. Last year's total of new settlers from the South was 53,723; thus the area that will be placed in wheat and other grains this year will greatly exceed that of last year. Settlers are making extraordinary efforts to get on their lands and begin seeding operations. The price of wheat now, away above the dollar mark, is incentive enough, and when one has in view the splendid results that the past few years have shown, it is not to be wondered at that the present will be the banner year for immigration to Canada. Ask your nearest Canadian government agent for rates of transportation, and he will also send you illustrated pamphlets.

Tricked of the Time.

A Philadelphia lawyer who spends most of his time at his country estate employs a sturdy Irish gardener whose one desire in life is to live until the banner of freedom is unfurled over Ireland.

One evening the lawyer strolled through the grounds of his place and stopped to have a chat with the gardener.

"Michael, do you know that while we are here enjoying the beautiful twilight it is dark midnight in Ireland?" he asked.

"Faith, an' Oi'm not surprised," replied the gardener. "Ireland niver got justice yit."—Judge.

"Hello, is this the Metropolitan?"

"Yes."

Two of the best doctors in Chicago said I would die if I did not have an operation, and I never thought of seeing a well day again. I had a small tumor and female troubles so that I suffered day and night. A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it made me a well woman."—Mrs. ALVENA SPERLING, 11 Langdon St., Chicago, Ill.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to many suffering women.

Impossible to be Well

It is impossible to be well, simply impossible, if the bowels are constipated. You must pay attention to the laws of nature, or suffer the consequences. Undigested material, waste products, poisonous substances, must be removed from the body at least once each day, or there will be trouble. A sluggish liver is responsible for an immense amount of suffering and serious disease. Ask your doctor about Ayer's Pills. He knows why they act directly on the liver. Trust him. *J. C. A Young Boy Killed.

A very sad accident occured either Sunday night or Monday morning on the B. & O. railroad about two miles west of Hicksville, when a young lad about 16 years of age met his death by some fast train, severing his head from his body and cutting off both his arms near the shoulder. It is not known when the accident occured but Monday morning the east bound passenger train saw him and was stopped and the lifeless body was taken abpard the train and removed to Hicksville where it was put in shape for burial. Upon his person was found a recommend from a Fort Wayne man in which it gave him the name of Jesse Baldwin, who was on his way to Sherwood, where he was to work for Sam Openlander. It stated that he was a good, honest working boy and that anyone would do well by securing him to work for them. Perhaps the young lad was on a freight making his way to Sherwood and fell from the train while in motion or else he was walking the track, but this part of the story is unknown.

Mrs. Laura Jane Work.

Charles L. Thomas, who is now engaged in the real estate business at Omaha, Neb., writes the Courier of the death of his sister, Laura Jane Work, at the home of her son, Leslie L. Work, in Conconully, Washington, on April 19th at the age of seventy-one years. Mrs Work was a pioneer resident of DeKalb county, coming to this county with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, in 1838, when she was but three months of age. She resided at Newville. She was married to Oscar Work by James Rose, who at that time was a justice of the peace. The account of the marriage appeared in the Courier. Her husband died in 1862. He was a member of the 11th Ohio Volunteers and was killed in battle early in the war. After his death she was postmaster at Newville until 1868. The deceased will be remembered by a wide circle of friends in DeKalb county.—Courier.

Hard Work Saved Home

The fire demon visited St. Joe last Saturday evening about six o'clock. Just as the people of our little city were sitting down to eat their supper Saturday evening, they were aroused with the cries of Fire! Fire! and upon investigation it was discovered that the house of Mrs. Wm. Coburn had caught fire and was under good headway. As soon as it was spread the people gathered from all directions to the scene and with the hard work of the men with ladders and pails of water the fire was soon under control. The origin of the fire was thought to have been caused by a crack in the chimney as the fire was underneath the roof and it was necessary to remove nearly one-third of the roof so that water might be put on the burning timbers. The wind was blowing at a fierce gale directly from the west making it very severe on the men the roof but they stayed right by it until the house was out of danger. Some of the goods were removed from the house but had to be put back. The damage will be considerable but the loss is covered by insurance. Although St. Joe is not protected with a fire department its volunteer department is nearly as good and with all our fire experiences the buildings have been saved with the exception of the S. M. George barn, but that could never have been saved. Mrs. Coburn feels grateful to all who assisted in the saving of her property.

Great Attraction.

Citizens to be Given Great Musical Treat.

On Friday evening, May 14, Hart's Boy Band and Orchestra is to appear in our opera house in one of their famous concerts. Wherever this organization has been it has attracted great attention and praise. In the G. A. R. line of march at Toledo, last summer, it drew the greatest applause of any organization in the line. The high grade of music played received especial comment in the Toledo papers. Such was also the case of the great Firemen's Convention at Napoleon. Thirty-eight bands were in the grand march and Hart's Boys were the center of attention all along the line. There too, the press paid them the highest compliments.

The organization is simply splendid on marching music, and our people will receive the evidence of their own ears and eyes when the band plays upon our streets, Friday afternoon of that date. Be sure and be in town to hear them. It will be a great treat and an agreeable surprise.

However, while the band is great on street music, its real forte is in concert work. The greatest classical productions are there rendered in all their worth and beauty. Fancy, spectacular drills, changes of costums, beautiful solos, choruses and quartettes. All together St. Joe has never had an opportunity to see and hear such a musical treat. They should be greeted by a full house.

From E. L. Woodcox

The following is the reproduction of a letter received from E. L. Woodcox, who is now located in Willow Island, Nebraska, which gives a little discription of part of his trip and of the town where he now is:- Left Las Animas the 26th. of March and went to St. Joe, Mo., from there I went to Perrin, Mo., to see a friend. There I went home with Mr. Lyons, that is my future partner. Conception is a quaint little town, within its limits are the Chatholics, Monastary and Convent, also a school. Then to Omaha, west from there on the U. P. R. R. Stopped at Wood River, then at Kearney. From Kearney we went to Miller, a northern branch of the North Platte. There is where they run their new motor cars. Last Friday we went up to North Platte. Then started up the north branch of the Platte river. Here I saw some of the finest country that I ever looked at, up that river as far as Oshkosh a new little town.

Oshkosh is situated in the heart of the North Platte Valley—the famous corn, wheat, oats, rye, alfalfa and potato belt in Western Nebraska. The soil is rich, the farms are well tilled and bring forth abundantly. The climate can't be beat. Oshkosh is on the new branch of the Union Pacific R. R., which is sure to become the main line in the near future. Oshkosh has a population of 200 or better; twenty-six places of business and boasting a greater volume of business than any town twice its size. No saloons. She is destined to become the largest town in the fertile North Platte Valley. She never experienced a boom and is practically what it was before the railroad started operations has splendid openings for various enterprises and professions. It is the finest place I ever saw.

Baccalaureate Sermon

The Baccalaureate sermon for the graduating class of 1909 was preached in the Christian church Sunday evening, by Rev. J. A. Brown. The house was well filled and the sermon was full of good wholesome advice and should the pupils follow the advice given them each will be better citizens and they will be better qualified to enter into the duties of life. Rev. Brown is a very able speaker and the address given the young people showed some earnest thought. Special music was furnished by the choir which added to the musical part of the program together with a male quartet. Rev. J. C McCain gave the opening and closing prayer.

Subject: Necessity of Preparation

Text: When the fullness of the time had come God sent forth his son born under the law, born of woman to redeem them that were under the law.

The subject was divided into two divisions namely:

1st. God spent 1,500 years preparing the world for Christ even God does not accomplish his work without preparation.

2nd. Preparation for life consists in forming correct ideals.

Last Wednesday evening closed the years work of the Ladies Liturary Club of St. Joe, which has been one of the most pleasant in the club's history. During the month of April various subjects were presented and discussed which were not allied to the text book, and from which valuable information was received. On April 7th at the home of Mrs Filley a fine collation was given the club ladies by the hostess. The club year of 1908-09 has been characterized by its enthusiasm and interest. The reward, profit and delight. With bright auticipations we look forward to the coming year. Another harvest reaped, another season flown, another year has passed, a little older grown.

Supt. J. E. Colborn of the Churubusco schools, has handed in his resignation and will accept the superintendency of the Morgantown schools. He is well known here where he enrolled as a DeKalb county pedagogue prior to going to Busco.

THE ADVERTISING ?

Patronizing the home merchant is all right and should be practiced by all but when you reverse the matter, "every merchant should patronize his home paper," it's a different proposition and is not given much attention by some. This week we are compelled to register a kick and it has become necessary that more space be taken, if it cannot be taken at home we propose to sell it to foreign advertisers. As every reader knows we are true to our merchants by accepting only home ads. We have went to press when the ads would not pay for the paper and expense of putting out the issue. We expect to hold THE NEWS to a 6 column and better advertising is necessary. Everything the print shop uses has advanced but our rates have never raised, and if not appreciated more we will give it to those who want our space and that very soon.

All business has its ups and downs, for instance: a man holds his ad off until press time and then informs us that he don't want an ad this week. That is provoking and besides places us in a bad condition, when we could have been informed regarding the ad when we first asked. Others say they are too busy. Something doin' about then. The Patterson—Fletcher Co. of Fort Wayne says: "Trade at home when you can get what you want, but when you can't go where you can get it." Think it over. The advertising question approaches us in the same manner.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Pickpocket and Policeman Slain.

Two holdup men with the Hagenbeck & Wallace circus shot and fatally wounded Joseph Kroger, a patrolman at Logansport, Ind., but before falling Kroeger fired two shots from his revolver. One of the footpads was hit in the abdomen and died at St. Joseph's hospital. The other escaped. The identity of the dead man is unknown. While he was in the hospital the doctors, sisters and priests endeavored to get him to make a statement, but he only cursed in reply. When he was dying, a priest made a last appeal to the man to tell his name, that his folks might be notified, the dying man, with great vehemence shouted: "You go to ——," then with a moan he sank back in bed and died.

Another Attempt on Whitla Child.

Charged with attempting to extort $10,000 from James Whitla, of Sharon, Pa., under the threat that they would kidnap his son Willie, two men were taken to police headquarters in Boston, Mass., for an examination. The men, who were arrested at the south end postoffice, gave their names as John W. Wright and Ernest H. Martin. The police claim that on April 23 Wright and Martin wrote to Mr. Whitla demanding that he send them $10,000 under penalty of having Willie kidnaped. The letter was printed in red ink apparently with rubber type, on white paper, and was mailed from the Dorchester central postoffice.

Threw Child Before Train.

After he had thrown a five-year-old girl on the tracks of the Michigan Central railroad just before the arrival of a passenger train at Gary, Ind., a coarsely garbed man disappeared in the underbrush with the apparent intention of allowing the child to be killed. Officer William Miller, who says he witnessed the affair, says the engineer stopped his train before the child was reached. The police have been unable to identify the child and can obtain on information from her except that her name is Sealetto, and that she does not wish to return to her home.

Kisses as Cause of Death.

Kisses given to his wife several weeks ago are said to have been the cause of the death of Schuyler Knotts at Evansville, Ind. His death was caused by tuberculosis of the larynx. Knotts' wife died a lingering death of tuberculosis. He was with her for days and nights before her death and physicians say Knotts contracted the disease from her.

New Trial Denied to the Coopers.

Judge William M. Hart of Nashville, Tenn., overruled the motion for a new trial in the case of Colonel Duncan B. and Robin J. Cooper, recently convicted for the murder of former United States Senator E. W. Carmack. The defense at once gave notice of an appeal to the supreme court and waived the formal sentence of twenty years in the penitentiary.

Big Fire in Des Moines.

Fire destroyed a five story brick building occupied by George A. Boody & Co., wholesale dealers in wall paper and paints, at Nos. 608 and 610 Sixth avenue, Des Moines, Iowa. ABDUL HAMID DEPOSED AND BROTHER REIGNS

"Red Sultan" Formally Removed and Reschad Effendi Made Ruler by Order of Assembly.

EX-MONARCH IS TAKEN AWAY.

Reported to Have Been Transported to Asia Minor—101 Guns Sound End of His Reign.

Abdul Hamid II., Sultan of Turkey, has been deposed from the throne of the Ottoman Empire by his subjects for his interference with the progress of popular government under the constitution granted by him last July, and his brother, Mehemmed Reschad Effendi, now occupies the throne. This decided change was decided upon Tuesday by the national assembly without a dissenting voice and it was carried out with the utmost rapidity. The Sultan is now a prisoner in the hands of the young Turks and carefully guarded by his captors.

The formal decree removing Abdul Hamid from all power of the Turkish Empire was issued by the Shiek-ul-Islam, the head of the church, in the regular form prescribed by the tenets of the Mohammedan faith. The city of Constantinople was alive with excitement, and throngs of the populace filled the streets. A number of arrests were made, but the change of sovereigns was effected without disorder of any kind. A salute of 101 guns announcing the end of the reign of Abdul Hamid and the beginning of that of Mehemmed Reschad Effendi was fired.

The Yildiz garrison surrendered Sunday to the constitutional forces in Constantinople. The commanders of these battalions began sending in their submission to Mahmoud Schefket Pasha Saturday night and the whole of the troops protecting the palace gave their formal and unconditional surrender shortly after dawn.

Sultan Abdul Hamid had been permitted to remain within the walls of the Yildiz Kiosk, where Saturday, in company with his ministers, he waited for the outcome of the struggle between his loyal troops and the army of investment, each hour bringing to him word of a fresh disaster. His army of defense, whipped, slaughtered and scattered, has vanished and the constitutionalists rule the capital city of Turkey and its 1,500,000 inhabitants.

After a day of carnage—in which fully one thousand soldiers were killed and many times that number wounded, the streets for hours echoing the roar of artillery, the rattle of rifle bullets and the clash of sabers, while walls of masonry crumbled to dust, battered down by the shells of big guns—Constantinople Saturday night was at peace. Calmness and confidence not known in weeks prevailed, showing popular belief in the ability of the victors to keep their pledges of restoring order.

Mukstar Bey, leader of the force which invaded the city, was killed fighting, and it is certain other brave men of the constitutionalist forces will be counted with the dead. Three Americans, two of them correspondents, were wounded during the battle, they having ventured too near the scene of combat. All Americans and other foreigners, with these exceptions, escaped harm.

After the rats had been washed away by the terrific force of the water the fire was extinguished.

$150,000,000 SWINDLE CHARGED.

Pittsburg Police Seek Man Accused of Get-Rich-Quick Plan.

William G. McLaughlin, a promoter, 60 years old, is being sought all over the country for endeavoring to perpetuate what the Pittsburg police declare was a $150,000,000 swindle, with a great share of the money to come from English capitalists. William H. Hayes, alleged partner of McLaughlin, is in police headquarters in Pittsburg, with eight informations for false pretense lodged against him. He will be taken to Greensburg, Pa., to face angry workmen, from whom he and McLaughlin are alleged to have obtained nearly $100,000. They organized a steel company at Greensburg and sold stock to steel workers in $1,000 lots, $200 payable in cash and $800 in labor. After the works assumed an air of prosperity McLaughlin is said to have interested English capital in the proposition to the point where the capitalists were ready to invest $150,000,000.

PLANS A $1,000,000,000 MERGER.

Harriman Said to Be Working on New York Central Consolidation.

According to a report circulated in New York City, E. H. Harriman has instructed leading corporation counsel in that and other cities to devise a means of merging the New York Central lines into one $1,000,000,000 corporation with a central management and one treasury. This, if effected, would operate more than 12,000 miles of railroad, including the New York Central, West Shore, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, Pittsburg and Lake Erie, Lake Erie and Western, Canada Southern and a number of other lines now controlled by or allied with the New York Central. It is understood that it is not proposed to include the Nickel Plate line.

BIBLES HIDE SMUGGLING.

Customs Officials Seize Costly Goods on Mission Boat.

Three customs inspectors confiscated a truckload of costly Asiatic goods from a missionary boat at New York. Among Bibles and hymn books were found enough rare china, lacquer and bronzes to properly equip a commodious Fifth avenue hotel. Inspector Sawyer on patrol along the South Brooklyn shore Wednesday night heard music. It was the chanting of a hymn brought to land by a chance turn of the wind. He went down to the end of a pier and found the church ship Sentinel. Sawyer became suspicious when he saw a number of boxes and barrels being loaded aboard the Sentinel and boarded her. He found that the packages labeled "prayer books" held Oriental goods forth a fortune.

P. F. COLLIER DROPS DEAD.

Publisher Was Attending Horse Show at Riding Club.

Peter Fenelon Collier, founder of Collier's Weekly, famous as a polo player and follower of the hounds, dropped dead in the riding club at 7 East 58th street, New York, shortly before 1 o'clock Saturday morning. Mr. Collier had been attending the twentieth annual horse show under the auspices of this club and had several horses entered. Scores of society people were in attendance and after the exhibition the guests went to the third floor, where a banquet was served. During the evening Mr. Collier seemed to be in the best of health and chatted merrily with his friends. As every one was leaving the table and making their way to the elevators Mr. Collier suddenly put his hand to his heart and with a groan fell forward on the floor.

With money derived, it is claimed, from the sale of souvenir hatchets during her campaign in the United States and England in behalf of the temperance cause Carrie Nation, champion saloon smasher, has purchased an extensive tract of land in Boone County, Arkansas, where she expects to spend the remainder of her days. Poultry, pigs, pigeons, peas and the famous Boone County apples will be raised in quantity by Mrs. Nation, according to the announcement of her agent who completed the deal. It is said her anti-saloon campaign has ended for good.

PEACE IN COAL MINES.

Operators and Workers Practically Agree on New Contract.

Peace in the anthracite coal region is assured for another three years.

President Thomas L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America, who with the three district presidents had been in conference with a subcommittee of the operators in Philadelphia for two days, made a positive announcement Thursday night that a new working agreement would be signed before the end of the next week. This contract will be based upon a proposition which has been submitted by the operators, and which, in the opinion of Mr. Lewis and his colleagues, contains a number of important concessions.

Acting on behalf of the union miners, Mr. Lewis accepted the proposition, subject to the approval of a tri-district convention, which was to be held in Scranton the next Tuesday afternoon. There is little doubt that the men will accept this new offer and will authorize their officers to sign the agreement. It is believed that the new agreement will accord recognition in some form to the organizations of anthracite miners, nor as a branch of the United Mine Workers of America, but as a distinct hard coal association. The contract will also provide that all new work shall be paid according to the wage scale authorized by the strike commission. There will be no increase of wages, but there will likely be readjustment of wages at new collieries.

HURL BOMB INTO CHURCH.

Historic St. Louis Cathedral in New Orleans Damaged by Explosion.

Historic St. Louis Cathedral, on Jackson square, New Orleans, twice razed during the war, was damaged Sunday afternoon by the explosion of a bomb, which was hurled into the gallery near the great organ. A christening party had arrived at a side entrance and in another moment would have been before the altar. No one was injured. Part of the structure's facade was torn out and many stained glass windows were ruined. Ferdinand Palma and Angelo Cabuto, Sicilians, who had been acting suspiciously about the church for several days, were arrested. Both were seen there Sunday and Palma carried a paper bag.

KEEP UP MASSACRE; PEOPLE ALL DESPAIR

Atrocities in Asiatic Turkey Continue and Starvation Claims Many.

SURVIVORS ARE IN DEEP MISERY

War Ships of Powers Land Marines, but Little Progress Is Made Toward Order.

The situation in Asiatic Turkey is one of extreme gravity. How many thousands have been massacred cannot even be estimated, because the disturbances have been so widespread that it is impossible to secure details of the happenings of the last ten days. The latest estimates of the number killed in the vilayet of Adana reaches approximately 25,000, and thousands have been done to death in the towns of other districts. The state of siege which several of the places are undergoing has brought the inhabitants to the verge of starvation, and each day brings its tales of further atrocities and the depths of misery and despair to which the savagery of the fanatics has brought the people. Several warships are now in the waters of the disturbed territory, but the disorders are so far-reaching that the efforts of the powers to restore normal conditions have as yet hardly been felt. A British warship has been ordered from Alexandretta to Suediah, where conditions have become worse. All the property of the Christians at Djebel Bereket has been destroyed. The total loss is unknown, but it will be enormous.

At the town of Adana more than 100 girls are missing. It is known that twenty-one native pastors have been killed. Fears are entertained that other American missionaries than those whose deaths have been reported have been murdered. There are 15,000 refugees in Adana and Tarsus and 5,000 at Mersina. A messenger, dispatched for relief by Miss Lambert, the American missionary, who two days previous sent an appeal to Constantinople, was killed in the streets. A second messenger, a soldier, was shot at. The vali has given assurances of the safety of Americans.

According to the latest information from the country around Alexandretta, the Armenian village of Kessab has been burned and many persons have been killed there. The women and children of Kessab are fugitives in the surounding mountains, exposed to hunger and violence. No news has been received from Hadjin, where five American women missionaries were reported to be in danger of violence at the hands of infuriated tribesmen.

BUILDING SCANDAL AT ALBANY.

Reports made to Governor Hughes, Lieutenant Governor White and Speaker Wadsworth, comprising the New York board of trustees of public buildings, concerning construction work on the State's new $4,000,000 education building will be considered at a special meeting of the board, and interesting developments are expected. The R. T. Ford Company of Rochester are the builders and Palmer & Hornbestel of New York the architects. C. V. Merrick, who represents the architects, told Lieutenant Governor White and Speaker Wadsworth that concrete foundations, which under the specifications should be solid, had been found by him to be hollow. He said he had heard that some of the work of the alleged hollow foundations had been done at night, between 2 and 5 a. m.

CINCINNATI BOY IS KIDNAPED.

Disappearance Follows the Receipt of Threatening Letter by Mother.

Leo Mulhern, the 12-year-old son of Mrs. John Mulhern, 413 West 5th street, Cincinnati, is missing, following the receipt by his mother of two letters threatening to kidnap the boy. The police believe that they have another Willie Whitla case to solve. Mrs. Mulhern received a third letter saying that the boy had been kidnaped and that he would not be returned to his home until she deposited $300 at a place designated in the former letters. Mrs. Mulhern's husband died recently, leaving her several hundred dollars of insurance. Leo attends the St. Peter Cathedral parochial school, and left home the other morning at the usual time for school. He did not arrive there, and when he failed to return home for luncheon at noon his mother became worried. Inquiry at the school developed the fact that the boy had not been there.

Work of Congress

Substantial progress was made by the Senate in the consideration of the tariff bill Wednesday. No Senator being prepared to speak on the bill as a whole, the reading of the measure by paragraphs was begun. The various items in the chemical schedule were passed over for future consideration. The reading was frequently interrupted by the discussion of amendments, and only eighteen pages of the bill were disposed of. Senator Cummins presented his income tax provision and discussed it at length. At 5 p. m. the Senate went into executive session. The nomination of Thomas C. Dawson to be minister to Chile was confirmed. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Republican criticism of the pending tariff bill on the ground that the rates were too high was prominent in the Senate Thursday, when Senator Nelson of Minnesota and Senator Dolliver of Iowa attacked various schedules. Under the guise of discussing the duty on gas retorts a general debate on the tariff was indulged in by Democratic Senators, Senator Bailey of Texas taking occasion to say that the bill was discriminatory against the South. Fifty of the 302 pages of the bill were read. The House was in session for forty minutes, but took no action on the census bill, the only important business which it had before it for consideration. Mr. Crumpacker of Indiana, chairman of the Census Committee, endeavored to have the House insist further upon its disagreement from the Senate amendments, but the absence of a quorum prevented such action. For the same reason no conferees were appointed. The House adjourned until Monday.

-:—:-

The first reading of the tariff bill for consideration of committee amendments was concluded when the Senate adjourned Friday. According to an agreement made when the reading was begun every paragraph of the entire bill will be subject to amendment when it is taken up for final consideration. There was comparatively little debate on the measure Friday, as Senator Aldrich postponed replying to many questions asked of him in order to hasten the conclusion of the reading of the measure, saying he would make full explanations when the various amendments receive final consideration. Many provisions, including the wood pulp and wool schedules, were passed over on specific objection. At 5:34 o'clock the Senate adjourned until Monday. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Denouncing the principle of a protective tariff as unfair in taking money from one man to give it to another in order to encourage him in the pursuit of an otherwise unprofitable business, Senator Bailey of Texas Monday delivered a set speech on the Democratic side in opposition to the pending tariff bill. Referring to Mr. Bailey's statement that the duties of the pending bill might be lowered 33 1-3 per cent, Mr. Aldrich asked whether he supposed the profits to American industries equaled that amount. Mr. Bailey replied that in the case of the United States Steel Corporation he believed they had, and he cited the increased capitalization of that organization as an evidence of enormous profit. Mr. Bailey discussed his amendment providing for an income tax, which was criticised by Mr. Aldrich as tending to reduce the protection that would be given American labor if it should result in a proportionate decrease of customs duties. Mr. Bailey favored restriction of immigration as a protection to American labor. Mr. Aldrich retorted that, while Mr. Bailey was ready to keep the foreign laborer from our shores, he was not averse to allowing the product of this cheap labor to come in competition with the product of American workingmen. Only a brief session of the House was held and an adjournment until Thursday was taken.

-:—:-

As the last half of his two-day speech Senator Bailey devoted nearly three hours in the Senate Tuesday to a discussion of the legal aspects of his income tax amendment to the tariff bill, citing numerous cases and authorities to maintain the view that such a law would be constitutional. He was interrupted frequently by Senators, who at times offered objections to his position or suggested authorities to sustain him. Mr. Scott spoke upon the tariff with especial reference to its effect upon the South and especially upon his own State of West Virginia. Mr. Gore of Oklahoma spoke in denunciation of the protective tariff. The house was not in session.

A Race for a Wife

BY

CHAPTER XXI.—(Continued.)

Pearman paused. He was a shrewd man, and he could not help being struck by the ability with which his opponent had got up his case. "Suppose I let you take the horse?" he said at length.

"Even then he is a valuable horse, and worth just now a fictitious price. There would be people who would give pretty nearly that sum to insure his not starting for that particular race."

"I give you credit, Mr. Rose," replied Pearman at length. "I'll sign a release of the mortgage, with this proviso, that my engagement with Miss Denison remains as it was."

'I have told you already that that question is totally aloof, and must be held entirely distinct from the claim of heriot. It is a point upon which I am not empowered to enter, and have nothing to say."

Grenville Rose is proving himself a master of casuistry. Though not his mission or interest to speak on that subject, I think it was one he had a good deal to say to.

"Then there is nothing more to be said," observed Pearman, rising.

"I am afraid not. It would be better on both sides, I fancy, if we had come to terms. We shall probably not make quite so much—that we must take our chance of. You will certainly lose a good deal more."

"You're right! I'll do it."

"Depend upon it, it's your cheapest way out of the scrape, and I hope Coriander will speedily recoup you. Excuse me for one moment, and I'll fetch the release. I had it drawn up in the event of your taking a sensible view of the transaction;" and Grenville left the room.

"All right, my pet, so far," he exclaimed, as he entered Denison's private sanctuary where Maude was anxiously waiting him. "Pen and ink, quick!" And seizing one of the telegram slips, he wrote rapidly:

"To Mrs. Hudson, Paper Buildings, Temple. From Grenville Rose, Xminster. Shall be home to-night; have something for dinner."

"There, fold that up, and send it off directly to the telegram office. No time to be lost, Maude."

"Well, I don't see much in that," retorted Maude. "What a gourmand you must be, Gren!"

"Never mind. Where's that deed?—ah, here. I'll explain it all to you afterwards."

"And my note?" she said shyly, holding it up.

"Neither you nor it will be wanted today, I think. But come back here when you have seen James off."

"Perhaps you'd rather I should never send it?" she inquired, half timidly, half coquettishly.

"Maude, be serious now, please. You may tease me as much as you like afterwards."

She said nothing, but flitted from the room on her errand.

Grenville Rose, armed with the deed of a release of the mortgage, and a similar acquittance of the heriot claim, all drawn up in due legal form, quickly returned to Pearman.

"Here," he said, is your acquittance, signed by my uncle. If you will sign the release, I'll hand it over to you. Shall I ring for a servant as a second witness to your signature?"

Pearman nodded assent, and upon the appearance of the butler, scrawled his name across the parchment, to which the witnesses signed their attestation. He then placed the acquittance in his pocket, took up his hat, and departed, without further demand for an interview with Maude.

Not that the heriot business had for one second put it out of his mind. No; to do him justice, he looked upon the probable rupture of his engagement as a very serious item in the losses the discovery of that mouldy old parchment had entailed upon him. If he did not love her, he admired her extremely, and looked forward to the connection with great eagerness. But he felt quite convinced that to have moved any further than he had already done would be simply to cancel it at once. He did not wish that. It was but a slender hold, he knew. Still, another shuffle of the pack might change all the hands once more. That slight link was better than none at all.

Thus meditating, he drove home, and having ordered his phaeton to wait while he wrote a couple of letters, to save the post, entered the house. In about half an hour he reappeared, stepped into the carriage, and drove to Xminster Station. His wishing to write those letters at Mannersley had caused him to make a considerable detour to the station from Glinn. Harold Denison's place lying, though off the direct road, somewhere about half way between Mannersley and the railway. On arrival there he went into the telegraph office, and dispatched a message. The clerk and Pearman were upon rather intimate relations. The late owner of Mannersley had employed the electric wire pretty freely. His son, also, was wont to use it a good deal. The latter, moreover, constantly sent the clerk game in the season—very often told him he had invested a sovereign for him on one of his horses that he thought was likely to win. It may be conceived that the conductor of the telegraph at Xminster held Mr. Sam Pearman in high esteem.

"You'll be going up by the six train, I suppose, sir? Only half-past three now, but I expect you're going home again first."

"Just so. I want to have about an hour at the paddocks first."

"One last look at the crack, eh, sir? Win, won't he, though they do take strange liberties with him in the betting?"

"He's very well and 'll make some of them open their eyes and shut their mouths before many days are over."

"Well, you'll have company up, sir—Mr. Grenville Rose, from Glinn; he's a-going by that train. Know him, Mr. Pearman, I suppose."

"Yes, I do know him," said Pearman, as he thought over their recent interview. "Beg pardon, sir; didn't know you didn't like him; he's usually reckoned a nice gentleman."

"How do you know he's going to town?"

"Because he sent a message to say so."

"What, a telegram? How long ago?"

"About an hour and a half; it was about two o'clock."

"That was the time I left Glinn, and his telegram left Xminster then. Hum! It must have left Denison's while I was there," thought Pearman. "What the devil could it have been about? I say, what was Mr. Rose's message—exactly?"

"Beg pardon sir, but, you know, we ain't allowed——"

"Yes, of course, I know; there's a sovereign for you—go on."

"Well, it can't be of any consequence, and you won't let out I told you, Mr. Pearman," said the clerk, as his hand closed on the gold coin. "It was only this: 'To Mrs. Hudson, Paper Buildings, Temple. From Grenville Rose, Xminster. I shall be home to-night; have some dinner.'"

"That was all, you're sure?"

"Every word, I'll take my oath."

"Thank you; keep a place for me by the six train;" and Pearman drove off to see his horses.

It was a very simple message, but the owner of Coriander had been quite long enough on the turf to know that a telegram may represent anything but what it appears to say. It disquieted him much. He wished that he had driven straight to the station instead of home to Mannersley; he might have written his letters there, and his own telegram would have been off much sooner. In the meanwhile here he was at the paddocks.

"Well, Martin?" he inquired, as his trainer came out to meet him; "how are they all going on?"

"Well as can be, sir. Coriander did two nice canters and a good mile and a quarter gallop, to wind up with, this morning. No horse can be doing better. But they tell me they're laying against him in London, as if something was the matter;" and the trainer glanced inquiringly at his master.

"Something has been the matter, Martin—too long a matter to tell you at present; but everything is now satisfactorily arranged. But I want to talk to you about those two-year-olds; so, come inside."

After a lengthened conference with his trainer, Pearman returned to the station. Grenville Rose was a fellow traveler with him and they even occupied the same carriage, but beyond a few words of recognition, no conversation passed between them.

Upon entering the Theatine, the first thing Pearman saw in the hall, on casting his eye at the notice-board containing the latest news, was that Coriander was once more first favorite for the Two Thousand, at seven to two, taken freely.

"Done again," he muttered, "somehow. And I believe that telegram and Rose are at the bottom of it."

CHAPTER XXII.

We must now revert to what Mrs. Hudson did upon receipt of her telegram—as harmless, apparently, as "the pork chops and tomato sauce" of Pickwick's immortal history. Yet even in that case "great events from trivial causes sprang." That lady is destined to be as much disturbed in a monetary point of view as Mrs. Bardell; but infinitely more to her own advantage.

Mrs. Hudson was lounging pleasantly enough in an armchair, reading the diurnal literature of her country in that abode of comfort, bliss, and intelligence, yclept Paper Buildings, when that most domestic of telegrams reached her. That she was attired in a morning coat, neat trousers, unimpeachable boots, and had a cigar in her mouth, will scarcely astonish the reader, who has probably already surmised that Silky Dallison represented that lady.

"Ah!" he exclaimed, after reading the message, "what a cross it looks like. But I must be off at once to see Plyart. Twenty minutes to three; just catch him before he goes down to Tattersall's." Mr. Dallison was a man of decision; he was into a hansom and at the door of the Victoria Club in something less than ten minutes. His conference with the bookmaker was short, and then they separated, both to make their way to the great Turf Exchange at Knightsbridge.

The remarkable feature of the betting on the Two Thousand that afternoon was the extraordinary advance of Coriander. From very long odds offered against him, he rose in the course of the day to be once more first favorite; reaching very nearly to his original price of ten days back. From the opening of the rooms Dallison was very eager in his offers to back the horse, while it might have been also noticed that Mr. Plyart accepted the long odds against Coriander. "Just to cover himself," as he said, "having laid rather heavily against him." But it quickly permeates through the Subscription Room that the horse is being backed in earnest, and when, about half-past four, Pearman's accredited agent began also to put money on the horse, the excitement became intense.

The Ring, or stock brokers of the turf, like their brethren of the eastern exchange, with all their acuteness are marvelously like sheep in times of panic. The leaders at both places can increase or depreciate property pretty much at their pleasure. As there is, of course, money to be made by such fluctuations, it can scarcely be wondered at that they do it. But why should the one be deemed virtuous and respectable, and the other the contrary? There is little to choose between the scandals of the two betting rings.

Grenville Rose, upon Pearman's departure, had carried the release in triumph to the squire. Harold Denison was jubilant beyond measure; free from his difficulties, and, to use his own expression, "out of the hands of those bloodsuckers, the Pearmans." The hopes Grenville had raised had influenced him in his influence with Sam Pearman, and, if a little sarcastic in his retorts, the bitter cynicism of his nature had toned down rather upon that occasion. Rose now thought it time to do a little work for himself; so without more ado, he reverted to his passion for his cousin, and solicited his uncle's permission for their engagement.

Harold Denison was a good deal taken aback. It must be borne in mind that he had not received the slightest hint of this in any way beforehand, and to say that he was pleased now he did hear it, would be very far from the truth. He liked his nephew, perhaps, as far as it was in his selfish nature to like anybody; but he still thought that Maude, with her personal attractions, ought to marry money or rank, if not both. Still, at the present moment, he was virtually indebted to his nephew for £10,000—a circumstance little likely to help him in the long run as men of Harold Denison's caliber generally hate most heartily those to whom they are deeply beholden. However, he had not come to that yet, and the way his nephew had outwitted Pearman pleased his cynic and vindictive nature much.

SEVEN BILLION DOLLARS.

A Yearly Sum from Agriculture Impossible to Imagine.

In all the circle of all your acquaintances, in all the circle of all your reading, do you know of a single billionaire? I don't mean—do you think you know. I mean—do you know that you know of a single capitalist who is really a billionaire? That is a lot of money, you know, says Agnes C. Laut in Outing. At 4 per cent interest it means an income of three and a third million dollars a month. I'm not talking of capital that is a quarter water and a quarter hot air and only half hard cash or convertible realty. I'm talking of wealth that can be handled with your hands and measured with your eyes, wealth that doesn't require convulsions of frenzied finance to be converted into terms of the mint.

You acknowledge frankly you don't really know of a single billionaire in the history of the world. Much less do you know of any group of capitalists in the world whose combined wealth would make twenty billions and whose twenty billions pay a yearly dividend of seven billions. A dividend of $7,000,000,000 a year means an income of $580,000,000 a month, or $19,000,000 a day. Talk of the fate of Midas! Any capitalist or group of capitalists who had to take care or that much money a day would have genuine convulsions in frenzied finance.

Such a capitalist, collectively, is the United States farmer. Such a dividend, collectively, does the soil of the United States yearly hand out to the farmer-man. By the last census the capital invested in agriculture in the United States was twenty billions, and by the last report of the agricultural department the products of the farm for 1907 yielded a grand total of seven billions. Compare these figures to the billion-dollar steel trust, over which the whole world went daffy a few years ago; and the magnitude of the greatness—and of the growing greatness—of agricultural interests in America becomes apparent. In fact, it would be hard to put your hand on a single department of industrial life, or constructive work in the United States, which would compare in importance to the permanent value and yearly yields of the farm. Then remember, too, that of all the manufacturing interests in the United States 75 per cent are dependent on the farm for raw products.

A Fool's Errand.

An Englishman, of the ever-serious sort, walked into the office of a New York liveryman and asked to see the finest trotter he had for sale.

"I don't care about price," insisted the Britisher, "but it must be a very, very fast horse."

The liveryman explained that he had a horse whose speed could only be shown at night when the roads were clear.

"Meet me at one o'clock to-morrow morning at the Claremont," he said; "we'll be in Yonkers at two o'clock, and that's going some."

Three hours later the Englishman rushed excitedly into the liveryman's office. "I don't want the horse," puffed the Englishman—"I won't have it at all."

"Why not? He's fast," insisted the liveryman.

"But what could I do in Yonkers at two o'clock in the morning?" replied the Englishman.—Success Magazine.

Harlem Musical Note.

"Oh, papa, papa!" cried the music lesson maid from the adjoining room, "there's a burglar in the parlor! He just bumped against the piano. I heard him strike several keys."

"All right, dearie; I'll go right down."

"Oh, James," sobbed the wife, "don't do anything rash!"

"Sure not. Leave that to me. I'm going to help the poor duffer. You don't suppose he can get that blamed piano out without assistance, do you?"—New York Herald.

A Precautionary Measure.

"Why do you laugh so hurriedly when your husband tells a story?"

"If I don't laugh promptly he tells it all over again."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Gratitude is like love—where it exists, it will show itself.—H. Lee.

CHICAGO.

Trade is stimulated by the more seasonable weather, and there is notable reduction of idle hands in the spread of industrial and farming activities. The volume of payments through the banks is seen to be well above that of a year ago, and money has a firmer tone, but rates for choice commercial paper are unchanged. Preparations for the May settlements indicate a release of interest and dividends exceeding former totals.

Confidence in the business outlook is reflected in a larger investment in bonds, stocks and improvements. Agricultural advices show more agreement as to extending acreage, there being much breaking of soil for the first time in the Northwest, where new settlements multiply rapidly.

Implement factories have increased outputs and there is wider absorption of wagons and hardware. Lumber receipts exhibit considerable gain, and the mills remain well employed, but shipments of various woods to Western points steadily grow, and building needs draw heavily upon planing mill outputs and quarry products. Numerous contracts have been negotiated for structural steel, pipe, merchant iron and forge work. Car builders obtained further orders for future deliveries and a fair tonnage is booked for rails and pig iron. Steel mils at South Chicago run closer to capacity, and the improved conditions afforded work to several hundreds of additional hands. Leather working trades find inquiries encouraging in belting, novelties and trunks. Shoe factories accumulate forward orders, while there is more steadiness in the markets for the raw material. Other factory supplies come forward amply for current requirements, but prices hold steady and, in some respects, have a firmer tendency.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 32, against 21 last week, 34 in 1908 and 19 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 8, against 5 last week, 10 in 1908 and 7 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Trade conditions are without much change, and irregularity is still the leading feature in business and industrial lines. Results of spring business are as a whole disappointing. There is, however, more doing in wholesale lines for next fall and winter, and the tone in this branch is fairly optimistic.

There is considerably more activity in the pig iron markets, and the volume of business doing in iron and steel is heavier. A large part of this, however, appears to be at the expense of prices, because structural material is apparently at the bottom, wire prices have been cut, and a number of other lines show the effect of the desire of manufacturers to get business.

Manufacturers are certainly buying more freely, though they report little increase in orders. Eastern shoe shipments are 24 per cent larger than a year ago, but still behind 1907.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending April 22 were 247, against 201 last week, 254 in the like week of 1908, 157 in 1907, 177 in 1906 and 193 in 1905.

In Canada the week's failures number 36, against 27 last week and 36 in this week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

HELD AS SLAYER OF GIRLS.

Man Said to Have Admitted Crime—Arrest May Clear Many Crimes.

Elmer Carr, declared to be the murderer of Mary Forschner and Lizzie Fulhart, has been placed under arrest in Dayton, Ohio, at the instance of H. H. Hollenbeck, assistant State fire marshal, and Bert Hullinger, a deputy fire marshal.

So strong is the web of evidence in which both Houlenbeck and Hullinger believe they have tnwined Carr that Hollenbeck was given instructions to proceed to Dayton and file affidavits against Carr for murder and arson.

This arrest, while having no direct connection with the Dona Gilman crime, it is firmly believed by the authorities, who have been ceaselessly working on the murders of young girls in Dayton, that Carr may be able to explain how Dona Gilman was killed.

Mrs. Carrie Middlestetter was being examined by officers of the Fire Marshal's office relative to the destruction of a house belonging to a relative of hers, and during her testimony she said that Carr had confessed to her that he had killed Elizabeth Fulhart. Mary Forschner's body was discovered by her stepfather on Jan. 23 in North Dayton. One arrest followed another, but nothing came of them. On Feb. 5, or about two weeks later, the body of Elizabeth Fulhart was found in a cistern in the rear of a house on West Jefferson street, Dayton.

Again many arrests took place, but no prosecutions were instituted because of the inability of the police to get the proper evidence.

Recently a fire destroyed a house belonging to Joseph Voges, a relative of Mrs. Middlestetter, near Dayton, and the inquiry held adduced the following testimony: That Carr had brought the Fulhart girl to a room in Mrs. Middlestetter's house. The following Sunday the same program was carried out, but that was the last seen of her. The dress which she wore that day, as described by the Middlestetter woman, and the dress which she wore when her body was recovered are identical.

The next Monday, Mrs. Middlestetter says, Carr confidentially asked her if she had seen anything in the newspapers regarding the disappearance of any young girl. She replied that she had not. "Well, you will," he is said to have replied, according to her testimony. On the following Friday the discovery was made, and although she was taken before the court during the Coroner's inquest, Mrs. Middlestetter states that she did not dare to tell what she knew of the case through fear of Carr. Carr was arrested and held as a suspect, but later released because of lack of evidence. Carr is said to have known Dona Gilman, who was also slain.

POWERS' EYES WATCH TURKEY.

All European Nations Interested in Fate of Ottoman State.

Turkey for many years has been the bete noir of European governments because her name symbolizes that enduring bugbear of old world chancelleries—the eastern question. What nations are to divide the territory of Turkey in Europe should the Ottoman Empire crumble? Is Russia to occupy Constantipole? Is the Anglo-Saxon or the Slav to be champion of occidentalism in the twentieth century? These are three of the chief questions which, taken together, constitute the famous near eastern question of which so much has been written.

England and Russia are the powers which chiefly stand face to face on the question. British diplomacy on the near eastern question has been mainly aimed at checking the attempts of Russia to extend her empire and strengthen her strategic position by absorption of part of the Turkish territory. Whenever any phase of the eastern question is opened the whole world becomes concerned. Russia is interested because the question affects her route to the sea and her relations with England, the United States and the other great powers. Austria is concerned because the question affects her prospects in the Balkan states. France is concerned because it affects her commercial ambitions in the far East, her claims in Africa and her route to the orient.

CRUISER STOPS FILIBUSTERING.

Expedition in Charge of American in Nicaragua Halted by Albany.

Capt. Benson of the American cruiser Albany, who has been in Central American waters under instructions from this government to watch developments in that territory, it is unofficially learned in Washington, stopped an alleged filibustering expedition in command of Capt. John Moissant, an American, which was about to cross from Nicaragua into Salvador. The expedition, it is alleged, was to start under cover of night. Capt. Benson threatened to open fire, it is said, if the supposed filibusterers made any move.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY.

Railroad contractors are rushing laborers to Alaska and contractors on the Pacific coast are compelled to pay extra wages to keep their men.

The Seattle chamber of commerce has appealed to the Senate to double the present duty on shingles to protect the coast lumbermen from Canadian competition.

The Winnipeg builders have settled their differences with the labor unions and operations are not likely to be again interrupted by strikes for another year at least.

A farm society that shall be active in politics and represent the rural population in the affairs of the nation is declared to be the great need in the United States by Norval D. Kemp, of Dayton, Ohio, former secretary of Roosevelt's farm commission.

The bureau of the census at Washington reports that the real taxable property of the United States amounts to about fifty-five billion dollars, the exempt to six billions. Railroads and their equipment, including street railways, add to our wealth nearly fourteen billions more, and nearly another billion and a half comes from telegraph and telephone systems, adding canals and shipping. There is half a billion under the head of electric lights and power stations. Live stock counts up four billions more, and all sorts of agricultural products, with farm machinery, give us two and a half billions. Manufactured products, added to manufacturing machinery, amounts to over ten billions. Gold and silver coin and bullion add another two billions; clothing, two and a half billions; and furniture, with carriages, and that sort of property, sum up nearly six billions more. These, with other smaller items, give us a total of one hundred and seven billions, to be compared with seven billions in 1850, and about twenty-five billions at the close of the Civil War. It would not be altogether pleasant to add to this magnificent showing, if we must, that millionaires own nearly the whole of it. Mr. Powers, who reports for the census bureau, says there is no reason for believing that this is true. He begins at the other end of the reckoning and shows that the common people have an enormous holding in farm lands and other homesteads, in bank deposits, and in other forms of real and personal property. We hope that the next census will make this point decidedly more definite.

In a speech on tariff, delivered in the House, Representative C. R. Davis of Minnesota denounced the lumber multimillionaires of his State as well as the methods by which the Northwest had been denuded of its tremendous timber resources. "In the fifty years that I have been a resident of Minnesota," said Mr. Davis, "I have seen one of the grandest forests of pine and other valuable woods disappear. I have seen that forest squandered recklessly, seen it purchased at a price that was almost for the asking and then the timber demolished and nothing left in its place. The only valuable timber of any magnitude now left is in the extreme Northwestern States, save and except some in the more Southern States. Eight years ago Minneapolis was the lumber center of this continent, and to-day about the only thing left from that immense forest is a large number of multimillionaires."

In a conference the Democratic Senators decided to vote as a unit for an amendment to the tariff bill imposing a tax of 3 per cent on incomes of $5,000 a year and over and an amendment to this effect was prepared by Senator Bailey. He estimated that it would produce $90,000,000 a year revenue. Senator Daniel wanted the conference to favor his proposition to tax the gross earnings of corporations, but the matter was not acted upon. On motion of Senator McLaurin it was decided to favor in general lower duties on the necessaries and make the needed increases on the luxuries. They went on record as against any tariff policy so deficient in revenue-producing capacity as to require a bond issue.

Tobacco users of the country have been paying war prices for their weed ever since 1902, and without anybody but the manufacturers of tobacco being any the wiser. The manufacturers, it is estimated, have profited something like $45,000,000 by the "mistake." The trouble was caused by the fact that the size of the packages, which were reduced from 2, 3 and 4-ounce sizes to 1 2-3, 2½ and 3 1-3-ounce sizes, was never changed. Representative Dawson of Iowa has discovered this mistake, and has introduced a bill to correct it.

Reassessments of duties amounting to a total increase of $1,239,000 on sugar imported by the American Sugar Refining Company at the refinery of Havemeyer & Elder, between December, 1901, and November, 1907, have been ordered by Collector Loeb of the port of New York. The imposition of the increased assessment is a result of the trial of the case of the government against the American Sugar Refining Company, which was recently tried, in which the government was awarded $134,000.

Wyoming wants an additional 1,000,000 acres of arid lands granted to it under the provisions of the Carey act, and Senator Warren of that State has introduced a joint resolution under the terms of which the United States would make the grant.

Western Senators are preparing to fight the drawback provisions in the Payne tariff bill. Dolliver of Iowa claims that under these provisions packers are given free trade in cattle, and Northwestern Senators claim that they allow the free importation of wheat from Canada for export. The House adopted an amendment requiring imported grain to be milled within twelve months.

The wheat corner that has just been established in Chicago by Mr. Patten has called attention to the fact that the consumers of this country are entirely at the mercy of our huge speculators. Our Congressmen in Washington are giving this matter serious consideration for it is admitted to be a critical state of affairs, when a hand full of capitalists can corner the wheat of the country and shove the prices up to an unreasonable figure, thereby robbing the millions of people of this country. However, the remedy is a very simple one. We have a tariff of 25 cents per bushel on wheat imported in this country. That tariff does not benefit all of the farmers of the country, so much as 10 cents per year and without that tariff the great wheat corner that has been formed, would be impossible for the reason, that as soon as the wheat reached a high figure, there would be a tremendous importing of wheat from Canada and Argentina, which would render it impossible to raise the price of wheat, without concerning the wheat of the whole world, which could not be done.

The only thing that Congress is being urged to do in this matter is to remove the tariff on wheat. This is one of the best illustrations of the evils of high tariff because in these times the formation of pools is so common, and there is no telling when one article of necessity will be cornering and thus compell the consumer to pay an exhorbitant price.

The income tax feature of the new tariff bill has caused quite a big row among Congressmen and Senators There is no earthly reason why the great fortunes that are being built up at the expeuse of the people should not be made to pay their just share of taxation, and nobody has ever disputed the justness of this tax. The Senate especially is afraid of this question. Heretofore the Senate has been the great defender of the millionaires, but these Senators are hearing from their constituents in no uncertain terms concerning the desirability of an income tax and a great many Senators have been given to understand that unless they support an income tax, they will remain at home after the next election. There has never been a time in the history of this country when the people were so free to express their wishes to the Senators and Representatives in Congress as at the present time and this is an exceedingly wise thing for them to keep up, for unless they watch their Senators and Congressmen, they are not likely to be well represented or have their wishes carried into law.

The Kansas City Journal thinks populism far from dead; that it exists, in fact, strenuously in both the Democratic and Republican parties. It has merely been fumigated, in other words.

Nervous Collapse

"I have traveled for thirty years continually. I lost a great deal of sleep, which together with constant worry left me in such a nervous state that finally, after having two collapses of nervous prostration, I was obliged to give up traveling altogether. I doctored continually but with no relief. Dr. Miles' Nervine came to my rescue—I cannot describe the suffering which this Nervine saved me. Whenever I am particularly nervous a few doses relieve me." A. G. C. LIBBY, Wells, Me.

There are many nervous wrecks. There is nervous prostration of the stomach, of the bowels, and other organs. The brain, the kidneys, the liver, the nerve centers are all exhausted. There is but one thing to do—build up the nervous system by the use of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. Its strengthening influence upon the nervous system restores normal action to the organs, and when they all work in harmony, health is assured. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

As a baseball fan, President Taft naturally proved a large success.

A minister complains that women's hats "incite men to profanity." And the bills even more so.

"Spring isn't on the job yet," says the Cleveland Leader. "Onto the job is probably what the Leader meant to say.

"What does Easter mean?" inquires somebody of the Columbia State. An inevitable dress parade, for one thing, it seems.

The efforts of the women this year seem directed entirely to the problem of making two or three supplies of hat material into one hat.

No American farmer would lose 10 cents in 10 years if the wheat duty were absolutely removed, and wheat corners would then be impossible.

A Boston man, before committing suicide, destroyed his banjo and his piano. It is not often that men are so considerate of those they leave behind.

Having in mind the strenuous and enthusiastic manner in which the D. A. R. divides itself, one might think the D. stands for Democratic.

The Hipless Corset.

This is a wonderful age. We have the "wireless telegraph," the "horseless carriage," the "noiseless gun" and the "hipless corset."

This marvelous bit of feminine harness makes a woman look like a hiplesswhatimus.

The horseless carriage has come to stay. The wireless telegraph is a success, but he, she or it who intimates, avers, or asserts that a hipless corset becomes any woman, exhibits a triple X brand of asininity that ought to excite the envy of every jassax in the land.

The woman who designed the hipless corset was either built on the architectural lines of a bean pole, or a firkin of fish. The woman who accepts this mechanical monstrosity with unalloyed pleasure, must be either a tub of tallow, or a hoe handle in disguise. It deforms a well built woman.

It is inconceivable that any woman could be induced to incase herself in one of these fashionable straight jackets. The women of China are classed as heathen because they deform their feet. It is a greater evil to deform ones body. A stout woman who tries to build her waist below her meridian, and tuck her abdomen away under each arm, makes herself absolutely ridiculous. It may make her appear "thinner," but she looks awful. The thin lady in hipless corsets looks more natural, but keeps you guessing as to whether she has buckled her belt above or below the equator.

Women having good figures are disfigured by hipless corsets. I am not in favor of tight lacing under any circumstances, but I have invented a couple beatitudes for the ladies which they will find to be true as gospel. Here they are:

Blessed are women who have hips, for they shall hipnotize.

Blessed is the woman who is built like a wasp, for she shall inherit a man.—Iconoclast.

Supplementary Forage Crops

By reason of the extremely dry summer of last year, many meadows were burned out, and many farmers this spring find their prospects for a hay crop rather discouraging. It also frequently happens that a farmer has too much live stock for his pasture land, and additional forage crops are necessary to carry them through the summer. Many inquiries relative to the above conditions are being received at this station, and in order to answer some of these, this bulletin is written.

Leguminous crops are always desirable because of their protein content and their beneficial effect on the soil. For Indiana the following leguminous crops may be recommended:

1. Clover may be sown in spring as late as May 1 and summer and autumn pasture be obtained. The small red and mammoth clovers are best suited for such purpose. They may be sown with or without a nurse crop at the rate of eight or 10 pounds of seed per acre. If the sowing is late, the seed should be covered by harrowing.

2. Canadian field peas and oats.—This crop may be sown from early spring to the middle of May. By making sowings at intervals of two weeks, a succession of crops may be had. The common rate of sowing is one and one-half bushels of each per acre. The peas are usually scattered broadcast on disked or harrowed ground and then turned under about three or four inches deep. The ground is then harrowed and the oats drilled a few days later. The land may first be prepared and each crop drilled separately, but this is not usually as satisfactory as the other method.

Peas and oats are good for hay, or to cut and feed green. When the oats are heading and the peas blossoming, one may begin to cut for green feed. For hay the oats should be in the milk stage and the peas should have well formed pots. Peas and oats can also be pastured to advantage with hogs. This crop will give a yield of five to seven tons per acre of green weight.

3. Cow peas—This crop is excellent for hay, green feed or hog pasture. Land should be prepared as for corn, and the seed sown after corn planting, or in southern Indiana, after wheat harvest. Sowing in rows and cultivating is the preferable method. If sowed in rows 32 inches apart, cultivation can be given with a corn cultivator. A grain drill (not a force-feed) with the holes not needed stopped up, is a good machine for sowing the seed. Set the indicator at two bushels per acre for wheat. Such sowing will require about one-half bushel of seed per acre; if sowed broadcast or with all drill holes open, one bushel of seed per acre is required.

Cow peas are cut for hay, or pastured, when some of the early pods are beginning to ripen. For green feed they should be cut—somewhat sooner. From six to eight tons or more per acre of green weight can be obtained. The Whippoorwill variety is most generally grown. The Clay, Red Ripper, Iron, Michigan Favorite and New Era are also good varieties; the last named being a good seed producer.

4. Soy beans.—The method of preparing the land, rate and method of sowing, and cultivation are the same for soy beans as for cow peas. Soy beans make good hay for sheep and cattle, if cut when the pods are two-thirds grown. If hogs are turned on when the leaves are beginning to turn yellow, they will harvest the crop to advantage. Many farmers cut the beans as soon as the leaves show signs of ripening, cure the crop, and store it for feeding to hogs in the winter. Soy beans are most often harvested as a grain crop, threshed, and the grain ground for feeding. The Early Brown, Ito San, and Hollybrook are some of the best varieties. Soy beans will make about the same yield of green weight as cow peas, and will yield from 15 to 25 bushels of seed per acre.

Of the non-leguminous crops the following are good:

1. Rape.—This is essentially a hog and sheep pasture. Land should be prepared early by deep plowing and the seed sown about May 1, either in drills or broadcast. Small lots may be sowed with a hand drill in rows 24 or 32 inches apart, and cultivated. This method requires about two pounds of seed per acre. Set the drill for turnip. Broadcast sowing requires about four pounds of seed. If sown with a thin seeding of oats, the rape plants will come on after the oats is cut and produce considerable pasture. Rape is also sown with corn at the last cultivation for fall pasture.

When the plants are about 12 inches high, they are large enough to be pastured. If they are not pastured to close, they will make a second growth. The use of hurdles is recommended. Care should be taken not to pasture when the plants are wet with dew, as pigs' ears become chafed and sore, and sheep are likely to bloat. One acre of rape will support from 20 to 30 animals for two months.

2. Sorghum.—No other crop will furnish so much succulent and nutritious food per acre as sorghum. Prepare the land as for corn and sow after corn planting time. Sow in rows 32 inches apart, using a grain drill set at less than one bushel per acre for wheat. This will require about one-half bushel seed per acre. Cultivate the young plants the same as corn. When the heads begin to swell in the "boot", the plants are ready to cut for green feed. Ripe sorghum may be cut and shocked for winter feeding. Sorghum may also be sown broadcast thickly and cut for hay. Sorghum will yield about 10 tons per acre of green weight.

3. Corn.—Corn is also an excellent supplementary forage crop. Plant the same as for the ordinary crop. The period of use may be lengthened by using sweet corn or an early maturing variety of dent corn for early cutting. Feeding may begin as soon as roasting ears have formed. Corn drilled thickly or sowed solidly with a grain drill is fodder corn and may be cut for hay.

4. Millet.—On good soil millet furnishes a heavy yield of fair hay. It may be sown from the middle of May to the middle of July. The land should be plowed or disked and well pulverized. The seed is sown broadcast and harrowed in, using about a half bushel of seed per acre. In about 60 days from seeding, millet is ready to cut. Cutting should be done just as the blossoms fall. If the hay is to be used for horses, care should be taken that seed does not form. The Common, German, Hungarian, and Japanese Barnyard are the varieties most recommended; the last named should be sown only on moist, rich soils.

The millets will yield as much as four tons of hay per acre under favorable conditions.

High School Commencement

The first annual High School Commencement of the Spencerville High School was held in the Lutheran church on last Friday evening, April 30. The graduating class of nine pupils, with the help of the first and second year classes and Prof. Keating were busy all week making the best possible arrangements for the success of the occasion. The auditorium was beautifully decorated in the class colors of pink and green, pennants and flags and on the side walls were hung the pennants of the first and second year classes in their respective class colors. The floral decorations were of pink flowers and green foliage. At an early hour the auditorium was well filled, a few seats only remaining in the lecture room empty. While the crowd was gathering the Spencerville Invincible Orchestra furnished many appropriate and fine selections. At eight o'clock the orchestra played a march while the class headed by Prof. Keating took their places on the platform. E. G. Bunnell of Indianapolis gave the class address. He spoke largely on the developing of the mind and the relation the mind was to the body, and said that much depended upon the attention given to the moral and spiritual side of life whether a student would succeed in life or not. H. E. Coe was unable to be present on the occasion much to the disappointment of the class. After a selection by the Orchestra Prof. Keating gave the class a short talk full of inspiration and spice after which he presented each with a diploma. The class then sang a farewell song and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Erick.

Professor Keating is a hard worker and has succeeded in bringing the school to a standing equal to that of any school in the state of its size.

CONSTIPATION MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

Munyon's Paw-Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They coax the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour; they do not gripe; they do not weaken; but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. In my opinion constipation is responsible for most ailments. There are thirty-two feet of human bowels, which is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged, the whole system becomes poisoned, causing biliousness, indigestion and impure blood, which often produces rheumatism and kidney ailments. No woman who suffers with constipation or any liver complaint can expect to have a clear complexion, or enjoy good health.

Munyon's Paw-Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weakening; they enrich the blood instead of impoverishing it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no dope, they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic. Price 25 cents.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Table-Land.

A late chief officer of one of the infantry regiments, relating some of his experiences in a recent expedition, said one day that after hours of laborious climbing up a steep and never-ending path, he heard a groan of despair from a private soldier. The Philippines Gossip tells the story.

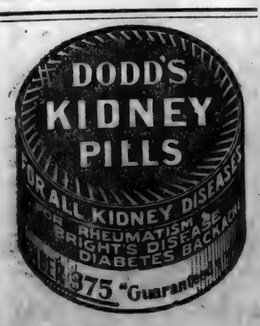
"So it is," replied the other soldier. "Can't ye see ye're climbing up one of the legs?"



THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE INTANGIBLE REALITIES.

By Henry F. Cope.

"He restoreth my soul."—Ps. 23:3.

Something within gives all without its meaning. To see with the eyes only is to be blind and to hear with the ear only to be pitiably deaf. The soul sits the interpreter of all, and upon this inner life depends the value of all to each of us; this inner self makes the crust by the wayside a feast to one, while the richest bill of fare spells only famine to another.

This spirit of life looks out through the eyes of our friends and gives love's fullness and beauty to their faces. We look not on their features; somehow we see through them to the being himself. We cannot call up their precise forms when we are away, yet we seem to vision their souls to our inner eyes. People are dear to us in the measure that we thus come to know their personalities.

In the past many were prone to err by too great emphasis on the soul as a separate entity, as something within man, a separate personality, as a divine life, which could go on loving the divine and being religious regardless of the habits and facts of the rest of the person. When we were children we were told that the soul was something which we were to save no matter what happened to the rest of us.

That was a foolish perversion. It permitted one to perfect the hypothetical at the expense of the actual. It was a cheap way of being good to keep an indefinable and invisible soul theoretically clean and to be so busy doing this as to have neither time nor strength to keep the hands actually clean or to use them in the service of our fellows.

So long as the soul was the real person, separate from and independent of "the vile body," the one thing to be saved, men were so absorbed in getting this imaginary particle into heaven that they allowed the whole of life, actual and real, to fall away in the other direction. If the soul was the only thing that could be saved it was a waste of time to spend effort seeking to redeem anything else.

No wonder that men revolted from the faith that fixed its hopes wholly on the unseen and, selfishly dwelling on that, degraded everything that was most fair and lovely and full of hope in the visible world. If one has been brought up in the atmosphere of cant phrases about the soul that has to be saved the natural reaction is to ask whether this soul may not be wholly a delusion.

But the danger is not less than in the other direction, that we shall seek to eliminate all except that which our hands can feel and our eyes can see. It is easy to forget that there are facts that lie beyond expression in terms of figures, of inches or energies in pounds and ounces. The things that have most to do with our own lives are not things at all, or they are really negligible as things.

A baby's hand may be mightier than steel chains. A line or two in the trembling handwriting of an aged mother will take a man where a regiment could not drive him. As things these are as nothing; as forces in our lives they may be incalculable. Something lies back of them that appeals to and moves something that lies back in us. Deep answers to deep.

Aspiration, gratitude, love, sympathy, repentance, and consciousness of imperfection, these are all facts in our lives. You may show that they have no tangible basis; no scalpel may find them; analysis may disprove them, but they simply are and no life can ignore the inner life in which they consist.

The activities of this spirit within are to be reckoned with in the affairs of our lives. We need to take account of them at least as much as we take account of the forces and atoms of the outer universe. The power within, the will of man, dominates the world without. What you are and what you make of life depends on what you are within.

The life needs to take deep draughts from the fountains that rise back in the mysterious unknown, to touch the life that lies beyond our own, to feel the reality of the unseen and intangible, to grasp the threads of the world that stretches beyond our dust and to make the real not only endurable but, even in its pain, glorious by the hopes that are cherished within.

CONSIDERATION OF OTHERS.

By Rev. Dewitt L. Patton.

"Who went about doing good, healing all that were oppressed."—Acts x. 38.

The tendency of business life is to make men calculating, selfish, limited in their sympathies. This disposition, stressed each work day and emphasized by competition, becomes a habit of the soul which takes control of life.

The tendency of the life of pleasure is the same. Those whose eyes are single to their own enjoyment, who are intent upon every opportunity for amusement, become superficial, cold and limited in sympathy. Selfishness with them likewise becomes a habit.

Qualities that we admire—nobility, kindness, sympathy, service—are to be secured like the practical qualities of life by making them habits of the soul. They will not come as the result of spasmodic action or sentimental day dreams. Acts performed daily ripen into habits. Do you want to keep from being the mean and selfish individual the practical life of business would make you? Plan to do some deed of kindness every day, some act which has no relation to your business, your own happiness or success.

Do your own work faithfully and well, but see if there is not an opportunity to lend a helping hand to another, to say a kind word, do an encouraging deed. In the midst of the hurly-burly of life, in the daily contact with men, take time for a look now and again for the weaker man, for the man fighting bravely against odds, for the wounded and bruised in the battle of life. Cultivate the habit of kindness, of consideration for others with whom you come in contact.

But not only for those with whom you come in contact, but others you do not see—a countless host in this great city, who daily share with the courage they can muster, but with dread as well, into the raging eyes of the wolf of poverty. Our city abounds in distress and suffering and misery which men might see if they would step out of their selfish routine. Do some deed of kindness each day until it sets into a habit of the soul. This is practical Christianity.

A good way to create such a habit is to commit one's self to some form of Christian or altruistic service. One of the objections urged by our pleasure-loving natures against definite service of any kind is that it ties us down. This is really one of its advantages. When you commit yourself to the service of others or make engagements with yourself to perform some duty, your good intentions do not dissipate into thin air, but are harnessed into practical work, and the disposition to be of use to your fellow men becomes yours at last, as the result of the habit of definite Christian activity.

DOLLAR WHEAT HAS COME TO STAY.

In Less Than Five Years Central Canada Will Be Called Upon to Supply the United States.

A couple of years ago, when the announcement was made in these columns that "dollar wheat" had come to stay, and that the time was not far distant when the central provinces of Canada—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—would be called upon to supply a large part of the wheat consumption in the United States, there were many who laughed at the predictions and ridiculed the idea of wheat reaching the dollar point and staying there. Both of these predictions have come to pass. Dollar wheat is here—and it is not only here, but is here to stay; and at the same time, whatever unpleasant sensations it may arouse in the supersensitive American, Central Canada is already being called upon to help keep up our bread supply, and within the next five years will, as James J. Hill says, literally "become the bread-basket of our increasing millions."

There are few men in the United States better acquainted with the wheat situation than Mr. Hill, and there are few men, if any, who are inclined to be more conservative in their expressed views. Yet it was this greatest of the world's railroad men who said a few days ago that "the price of wheat will never be substantially lower than it is to-day"—and when it is taken into consideration that at that time wheat had soared to $1.20, well above the dollar mark, the statement is peculiarly significant, and doubly significant is the fact that in this country the population is increasing at the ratio of 65 per cent, while the yield of wheat and other products is increasing at the rate of only 25 per cent. For several years past the cost of living has been steadily increasing in the United States, and this wide difference in production and consumption is the reason.

This difference must be supplied by the vast and fertile grain regions of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. There is now absolutely no doubt of this. Even the press of the country concedes the fact. Results have shown that no other country in the world can ever hope to equal these provinces as wheat producers, and that no other country can produce as hard or as good wheat. Said a great grain man recently, "If United States wheat maintains the dollar mark, Canada wheat will be well above a dollar a bushel, for in every way it is superior to our home-grown grain."

With these facts steadily impinging their truth upon our rapidly growing population, it is interesting to note just what possibilities as a "wheat grower" our northern neighbor possesses. While the United States will never surrender her prestige in any manufacturing or commercial line, she must very soon acknowledge, and with as much grace as she can, that she is bound to be beaten as a grain producer. It must be conceded that a great deal of the actual truth about the richness of Canada's grain producing areas has been "kept out of sight," as Mr. Hill says, by the strenuous efforts of our newspapers and magazines to stem the exodus of our best American farmers into those regions. It is a fact that up to the present time, although Canada has already achieved the front rank in the world's grain producers, the fertile prairies of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have as yet scarcely been scratched. Millions of acres, free for the taking, still await our American farmers; and when these millions are gone there are other millions in regions not yet opened up to immigration. A few years ago the writer, who had been through those wheat provinces several times, laughed with others of our people at the broad statement that Canada was bound to become "John Bull's bread-basket." Now, after a last trip (and though he is a staunch American) he frankly believes that not only will Canada become John Bull's bread-basket, but it will within the next decade at least BECOME THE BREAD-BASKET OF THE UNITED STATES. Perhaps this may be a hard truth for Americans to swallow, but it is a truth nevertheless. And it is at least a partial compensation to know that hundreds of thousands of our farmers are profiting by the fact by becoming producers in this new country.

The papers of this country have naturally made the most of the brief period of depression which swept over Canada, but now there is not a sign of it left from Winnipeg to the coast. Never have the three great wheat raising provinces been more prosperous. Capital is coming into the country from all quarters, taking the form of cash for investment, industrial concerns seeking locations, and, best of all, substantial and sturdy immigrants come to help populate the prairies. Towns are booming; scores of new elevators are springing up; railroads are sending out their branch lines in all directions; thousands of prosperous farmers are leaving their prairie shelters for new and modern homes—"built by wheat"; everywhere is a growing happiness and contentment—happiness and contentment built by wheat—the "dollar wheat," which has come to stay. Notwithstanding this, the Canadian government is still giving away its homesteads and selling pre-emptions at $3.00 an acre, and the railway and land companies are disposing of their lands at what may be considered nominal figures.

New York City railways carry more passengers each day than do all of the other railways in the United States.

LAXATIVE FOR WOMEN FREE

There is a great difference in the purposes to which a laxative should be put. Tablets and pills, salts, etc., are usually violent purgatives or cathartics, and altogether too powerful for the average person.

A woman at all times needs only a mild laxative—in fact, none other is needed by anyone, weak or strong though they may be, for the object is simply to move the bowels, and if a gentle laxative will do it, what is the use of a violent one?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has earned a well-deserved vogue among women and children and old folks—people who must necessarily be careful of what they take.

It is a liquid laxative tonic and admittedly the greatest stomach, liver and bowel remedy before the American people. The price is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle, as it comes in both sizes, and all druggists sell it. Its pleasant taste and gentle action make it an ideal remedy for women in constipation, torpid liver, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn and such like digestive complaints. Its use for a short time will remove the trouble entirely so that future medication will be unnecessary. Its tonic properties build up the stomach and intestinal muscles so that they act naturally again. That this is so is the experience of many heads of families, like Mrs. Brannan, of Alvarado, Va.; Mrs. K. L. Stout, of Louisville, Ky., and numerous others; in fact, way out in Williams, Cal., as Mrs. J. E. Blackmore, of that place, writes, the whole town seems to be using it.

If the remedy is new to you and you want to make a trial of it before buying, send your name to the doctor's address as below and a free test bottle will be sent you. Then, if results are satisfactory you can buy it of your druggist.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

"Not exactly that; but they would give you your choice between being hanged or shot."

For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Uses for Waste Wood.

Uncle Sam is concerned about the willful waste of wood which seems predestined to create woeful want. Millions of cords of wood are wasted every year in the forest and on the farm because this wood is not suitable for the various mechanical uses for which wood is employed. There are, however, numerous means of disposing of this waste. Aside from tanning and paper making, which are chemical industries that have been established for hundreds of years, there are other industrial uses of more recent origin which are of agricultural importance.

Important among these are destructive distillation, recovery of turpentine, resin, paper pulp, preparation of alcohols and manufacture of acids. These are growing industries because of a steadily increasing demand for wood alcohol, acetates, acetone, turpentine, charcoal, etc., which are utilized in other industries.

The crude products from distillation are chiefly four—gases, tar and oils, charcoal and acids. Methyl alcohol, acetates, acetone, charcoal, turpentine, wood oil and oxalic acid are directly or indirectly obtained on a commercial scale from woods, and the yield is governed largely by specific gravity, weight and kind of wood as well as by the way in which the manufacturing process is carried on.

OLD SOAKERS

Get Saturated with Caffeine.

When a person has used coffee for a number of years and gradually declined in health, it is time the coffee should be left off in order to see whether or not that has been the cause of the trouble.

A lady in Huntsville, Ala., says she used coffee for about 40 years, and for the past 20 years was troubled with stomach trouble.

"I have been treated by many physicians but all in vain. Everything failed to perfect a cure. I was prostrated for some time, and came near dying. When I recovered sufficiently to partake of food and drink I tried coffee again and it soured on my stomach.

"I finally concluded coffee was the cause of my troubles and stopped using it. I tried tea and then milk in its place, but neither agreed with me, then I commenced using Postum. I had it properly made and it was very pleasing to the taste.

"I have now used it four months, and my health is so greatly improved that I can eat almost anything I want and can sleep well, whereas, before, I suffered for years with insomnia.

"I have found the cause of my troubles and a way to get rid of them. You can depend upon it I appreciate Postum."

"There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

The question as to who shall be Mayor of Fort Wayne is causing no little amount of excitement in the city at present. Five democrats have placed their announcements for the office, those being Joseph A. Haley, Henry P. Scherer, August M. Schmidt, Albert E. Meiching and Charles McCulloch. It seems as though Mr. Hoey was down and out. The policies the candidates are advocating is that they stand for the maintainance of the principle of municipal ownership and that they are in favor of track elevation. Lodged In Jail

When postmaster DeBrular opened his official mail Monday morning he found a description of the men who robbed the post office at Kent, Ohio, last Tuesday and immediately paid a visit to the master mechanic's office, where the information was posted. About an hour after a Roumanian gentleman called at the B. & O. and asked for a position, Master Mechanic Bowden and Clerk Warner recognized the gentleman as one of the post office robbers. They gave him temporary employment and phoned for Marshall Brennen, who responded quickly and took him to the lock-up. In the "sweat out" process it developed that his name is Mike Antonio, alias Matelu Autine, which he did not deny. He is said to fit the description exactly without a single variation. He is about thirty years of age. With his talk with Marshall Brennen he "coughed up" on two other natives of his country who were at a boarding house in this city; they were then taken into custody and the three of them are now in the lock-up. They gave the names of Sam Murrij and Nick Pelenian. When the party was searched two dangerous knives and a burglars mask were found.

Concord township at present has thirteen common school graduates this year and on Saturday of this week the last examination will be held. The arrangements for the commencement are being made by Trustee Fetters. The exercises have been settled upon for Wednesday evening, June 2, 1909, at the Concord M. P. Church. The Spencerville orchestra will furnish the music and an admission of ten cents will be charged at the door to defray the general expenses of the commencement. All parents of graduates will be admitted free. This surely speaks well for Concord schools.

Alumni Banquet

The sixth Annual Banquet of the St. Joe High School Alumni Society was given in the Lutheran church basement last Friday evening. Arrangements were made with the society for holding the program in the basement of the church but when it come to put a piano in for the musical part of the program it was found that the door was not wide enough and so the upper part of the church was turned over for the program and the basement was used for the banquet. The program opened with the singing of the Alumni Ode after which the President, Ray D. Herrick, gave the welcome address and was responded to by Lena Coburn, Speaker of the Class of '09. With the omission of several numbers Bert Woodcox sang a solo, which closed the program for the evening.

The guests departed to the basement of the church where an elegant banquet was served to about seventy-eight, with Merritt Sechler as Toastmaster. "Benefits of the Alumni" was given by Esther Bowman of Spencerville. Wafers and Herring in sauce were served for the first course.

The second course consisted of lettuce sandwiches, olives, vegetable salad, coffee and pickles, after which the toast on "Pollwogs" was responded to by Laura Woodcox, written by Lee O. Tustison of Dennison, Texas. This subject was very appropriate for Lee as the class was under his instruction while in the first year of High School and to make it complete Prof. Howard Ely was to treat them as "Bull-frogs" having completed their work under his instruction, but owing to his absence a letter was read from Lester Curie of Tulsa, Okla., expressing his regrets for not being able to attend their annual feast. Below we reproduce the letter in full.

Tulsa, Okla. May 2, 1909.
Alumni of St. Joe High School,
St. Joe, Ind.

Fellow Members:—

The program and menu of the annual banquet of the society received.

It is a pleasure to note that the class of '04 is again at the front doing duty as becomes it. I claim the honor of being an alumnus. To me it is a regretful fact that I have been unable to attend the last several banquets, and mingle with my former associates —comrades.

I have retrospected to the time of my commencement, and the meaning of the word "commencement" strikes me with its full power. It is now five years since my graduation and I have just now begun to believe that my ship is ready to leave port and enter upon its voyage to its destination, where I know not.

Having been and being in touch with so many prominent people so much knowledge has come to me other than that garnered in the schoolhouse on the hill that the thought comes to me I was very vain while a senior in high school. Knowledge gained in school is elementary, but that which we obtain after our school is over is the polish to make the other useful.

Sincerely regretting my inability to attend the coming banquet and listen to the wise and witty remarks, and thanking you for the program—also wishing to extend my cordial regards to all, I am,

Fraternally Yours,
Lester Curie.

At this time maple cream and cake was served. "The Alumni as a Matrimonial Bureau" was treated by Mrs. Dr. Sheffer in a very skillful manner stating that it was necessary in any successful organization. In her mind the bureau of this society has surely been a success and to a few it has been a "Howling" success. The banquet was a success in every way and the president is to be congratulated upon getting his committees to working to bring about the success.

Mrs. Lora Leighty was called upon to read a word written by Roy Maxwell which was secured without him knowing it as follows.

THE CLASS OF '09

The end of school has surely come,
And things are fairly on the hum,
The Juniors are a saucy bunch
Especially the one that we call Hunch.

The Methodist preacher's daughter she,
Has got more spunk than sixty-three.
But things may come, and things may go,
The Seniors are able to hoe their row.

For three long years we've stood the test
And proved ourselves in all things best,
We've labored hard and labored long,
And helped to boost the school along.

When we were Freshies numbering fourteen,
A jollier bunch was not to be seen,
Although our second year was smaller
We were slowly growing taller.

Our whole class from the larger to the littlest,
Fully represents the survival of the fittest
Although we only number five,
We're the best that still survive.

Judge Penfield Dead

After lingering between life and death for several weeks, Judge William L. Penfield, professor of international law at Georgetown university, formerly solicitor of the state department and one of the most distinguished men Indiana has given to the public service of the nation in recent years, died Sunday morning at his home in the Ontario apartments.

Judge Penfield had been in poor health for some time and since March 20 had been unable to attend to business. The immediate cause of death was heart trouble, brought on by a complication of diseases.

At the bedside at 5 o'clock Sunday morning, when Judge Penfield passed away, were members of the immediate family and Mrs. George W. Duncan, of Greenfield, Ind., his only sister, who was summoned here when there appeared to be no hope of his recovery.

The funeral was held Tuesday at 3 o'clock at the Mt. Pleasant Congregational church, the Rev. M. Ross Fishburn officiating. The body was laid at rest at Rock Creek cemetery, Washington.

Mrs. Iona Woodcox was at Hicksville, Tuesday.

Frank Bishop of Garrett, was in town the first of the week.

H. S. Commencement

Another Successful School year just finished with five Young Graduates.

Last Wednesday evening the Annual commencement exercises of our high school were pulled off in the Widney opera house, which closed another successful school year. The evening was nice and the tickets were nearly all sold for the first evening. There were a number of visitors from a distance present besides a great many of the country people. Special attention had been given to the music by C. A. Woodcox, who had the choruses in charge. Before the program opened proper the audience was entertained by the St. Joe Orchestra which furnished the best music obtainable for such occasions. The program was opened with a chorus of about twenty voices after which Rev. J. C. McCain led in prayer. "The Value of a Good Character" was discussed by Hazel Perry in a very pleasing manner and she showed how that it was necessary for a young person to succeed they must have a pleasing character and not only that, but clean habits as that counts in securing a position today. Many other good points were brought out.

A violin solo by Fuchsia Hadsell was rendered at this junction and when we merely note that she played a solo, there's no use saying anything more as they always please. "The Power of an Idea", by Lena Coburn was given in a good tone and showed much thought on her part. She used for an example the steamboat as invented by Robert Fulton. When he spoke of such a thing as the steamboat the people all laughed at him and tried to make out that he was crazy but he had the idea and the will power to work out his thought and today you can see the results of his labors. While on the other hand there are a great many men who have ideas and are not in a position to work them out and never realize anything out of their work. It is necessary that a man be educated today to make a mark in the world and to work out things for himself, if he fails to do this there are onlookers ready to take it up and will gain by him not being in a position to work out his own ideas.

Mary Scholes was the next number on the program with a vocal solo which was appreciated very much. "The Magic of Mechanism" by Herbert Sherer was a deep subject and was dealt with in a very creditable manner. A great many of our inventions such as the phonograph and the different uses of electricity show a great deal of thought upon the part of the inventor and when constructed in the proper way see what different ways it can be used as for example electricity. It is beyond the comprehension of all.

Mrs. Lora Leighty and Foraker Ferrell rendered a pianoduet at this time in their usual pleasing manner.

"Progress of the American Nation", Helen Patterson. This subject explains itself as we can see on every hand the progress that is being made each day. Every person is busy at his work and pays but little attention to the outer world. The progress of the great temperance wave that is sweeping our land today was given due attention as it is one of the things that is progressing rapidly and will occupy a prominent place in the worlds history. The American people are a people of progression and nothing is too large for them to undertake.

"America and Its Opportunities", Roy Maxwell. Opportunities present themselves in most any line of business and are soon snatched up by the man or woman who has gitted himself for such work. The man who expects to take hold of an opportunity by sitting down and waiting for it to present itself will get left, he must be a wide awake, enthusiastic and energetic worker and look for it, and be ready to take it up as opportunity presents itself but once to each of us and it is therefore necessary that we fit ourselves when young in order to be able to take hold when it is given us. Next on the program was a chorus after which Elder Brown pronounced the benediction.

Class Address

The Class address was given in the opera house on Thursday evening and the night was rainy and bad but in spite of this a fair sized crowd attended. The orchestra furnished the music while the crowd gathered. The chorus opened the program followed by the invocation by Elder Brown of the Christian church, Foraker Ferrell rendered one of his solos on the cornet which received the hearty applause of the audience. Herbert Sherer introduced Prof. J. W. Gray of Adrian, Mich., who delivered the address of the evening. Eccl. 7, 12. "Wisdom is a defense, money is a defense, but the excellency of knowledge is that wisdom giveth knowledge to them that have it" contained the substance of his evening's talk to the class. It was beyond a doubt the best address ever given in St. Joe on such an occasion and it was filled with practical truths and wholesome advice. He said it was perfectly right to strive for money but that it was much better to strive for a good education as it would be more enjoyed of the two. Many good thoughts were brought forth but we are unable to numerate them. Fuchsia Hadsell rendered one of her favorite violin solos. Prof. Howard Ely then made a neat little address to the public for the interest they have had in the schools the past year and thanked the class for the courtesy they had shown him while under his instruction, after which he presented each graduate with a diploma. Following the chorus Rev. McCain pronounced the benediction.

On account of the hot weather the opera house rink closed for the season with last Saturday evening.

The five railroads of the county, the Lake Shore, the B. & O., the Vandalia the Wabash and the Toledo & Chicago Interurban, have paid into County Treasurer Slaybaugh the first installment of their taxes for the year. They aggregate over $38,000, which is a pretty good-sized part of the county's taxes. The B. & O. railroads paid into Concord township $2,043.07 and into St. Joe town $334.48. The Wabash railroad has paid to Concord township $1,432.08.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Wellman to Fly to the Pole.

Walter Wellman has announced that he will this summer renew his efforts to reach the north pole by means of a dirigible balloon or airship. All the preparations have been made and Mr. Wellman will sail next week for Paris and Norway. This expedition will be under Mr. Wellman's individual ownership and responsibility. The capital has been supplied by Americans who are interested in the enterprise solely on scientific and patriotic grounds. No change has been made in the general plan of the expedition, which is to assemble and inflate the airship at the headquarters station, at Spitzbergen in June and July, and to start thence northward through the air in August, provided the weather conditions make a start practicable with reasonable chance for success. The airship to be used is the America, which had a trial in a voyage of about twenty miles at Spitzbergen a year ago last September. The owners of the Chicago Record-Herald have turned over to Mr. Wellman, free of charge, the airship, plant, buildings and machinery of Mr. Wellman's former enterprise. If the America is able to start next August on her long journey of 700 miles through the air to the pole, she will carry three men, 6,000 pounds of gasoline for the engines, food for a year, sledge dogs, life boat, and all the requisites of a sledging party should it be necessary to resort to sledging. Engineer Vaniman, who was in charge of the ship's engines during her trial voyage in 1907, will be one of the crew.

Ten Injured in Trolley Accident.

The turning over of a car on the Dayton and Northern Traction line resulted in injury to about ten persons. Five have been rushed to the hospital and one woman is said to be in a critical condition. She was pinned beneath the car and received serious injuries. The car was coming into Dayton, Ohio, and left the rails as it turned a curve at Main street and Fairview avenue, north of the city.

Patten is in Chicago Again.

James A. Patten, of the brokerage firm of Bartlett, Patten & Co., of Chicago, whose deals in wheat have brought him into international notice recently, has returned to his Evanston residence. He has been resting on his Colorado ranch during the last two weeks. He has kept his presence a secret and is conducting his market campaigns from his residence, where he has had special wires put in.

Leaped to His Death.

While delirious, Captain William Cook, captain of the "Cherry Pickers," Toledo's famous Elks' drill squad, escaped from his attendants on the fourth floor of his apartments in Toledo, Ohio, and hurled himself through a window, was killed when he struck the pavement below. His thirteen year old daughter attempted to stop him, but he wrested himself from her grasp.

Roosevelt Holds Record for Lions.

Theodore Roosevelt went lion hunting again and before the chase was over two more big lions had fallen before his gun. Mr. Roosevelt now holds the record for lion killing in the protectorate. Since last week a total of five lions and one lioness have been bagged by him.

Great Sunol, 2:08¼, is Dead.

Sunol, 2:08¼, former queen of the trotting turf, died at Newton Square, Pa., where she was being kept for breeding purposes. Sunol was foaled in 1886 at the Palo Alto, California, stock farm of Senator Leland Stanford, her sire being the famous Electioneer.

Bottle of Gasoline Exploded.

A bottle of gasoline exploded in the home of Katharine McCarthy, Buffalo, N. Y., and the young woman was badly burned about the hands and face. The fire that followed swept through the house, doing $3,000 damage. The loss is fully covered by insurance.

Auto Turns Turtle; Eight Hurt.

Eight persons were injured, four seriously, when an automobile going at a good rate of speed on the Ocean Beach boulevard near San Francisco, Cal., turned turtle at a curve.

Oil Lamp Exploded.

Fire completely destroyed the home of W. F. Malone, at Abilene, Tex., together with all its contents, valued at $3,500. The fire originated from the explosion of a lamp.

PEACE CHAMPIONS IN SESSION AT CHICAGO

National Congress Is Urged to Begin a Campaign of Education to Banish Conflict.

PRESIDENT TAFT SENDS LETTER

Leaders from All the States and European Nations Voice Cry to the World.

The second national peace congress was opened formally in Chicago for a three days' session. Orchestra Hall was well filled with delegates. Robert Treat Paine, of Boston, president of the American Peace Society, was in the chair.

Addresses of welcome were made by Governor Charles S. Deneen and Mayor Fred A. Busse, of Chicago. The Rev. A. Eugene Bartlett, chairman of the reception committee, welcomed the delegates to the work of the congress, and told them of the arrangements that had been made for their comfort and convenience.

In his address of welcome Dr. Bartlett said: "This congress must be more than a spasmodic expression of protest against war, and a resolution that disarmament would be desirable. It should inaugurate a still more effective campaign of education of the people in the interests of permanent, world-wide peace. The burdens of war are borne by the common people, and in the end the verdict of war or peace must rest with the rank and file of the people."

President Taft in his letter applauded the purpose of the conference and said:

"The United States has contributed much to the cause of peace by assisting countries weak in respect to their internal government so as to strengthen in them the cause of law and order. This relationship of guardian and ward as between nations and countries, in my judgment, helps along the cause of international peace and indicates progress in civilization. The policy of the United States in avoiding war under all circumstances except those plainly inconsistent with honor or its highest welfare has been made so clear to the world as hardly to need statement at my hands. I can only say that so far as my legitimate influence extends while at the head of this government it will always be exerted to the full in favor of peace, not only as between this country and other countries, but as between our sister nations."

Exercises of many kinds were held in the city Sunday as a preliminary to the opening session. Special peace services were held in all of the churches in the morning. In the afternoon there was a labor demonstration and the Socialists held several meetings. In the evening a big mass meeting was held under the auspices of the Sunday Evening Club, at which Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell, discussed taxation and war. President Schurman predicted that there would soon come from the property classes in all countries a demand that some way be found to reduce the cost of defense and preparations for war.

WOULD SLAY FALLIERES.

Anarchist Taken at Monte Carlo, Where President Is Guest.

A man named Verdier, who was arrested in Monte Carlo, Monaco, by the French police, declared that he was an anarchist and that he had come to Monte Carlo for the purpose of killing President Fallieres of France, who is visiting there. A revolver loaded with jacketed bullets was found on Verdier, as well as a letter addressed to the prefect of the Department of Alpes Maritimes, in which the man explained the motive of his contemplated act. Verdier comes from Haute Garche. The police believe that he is insane.

GIRL SLAIN AT COLLEGE.

Youth Shoots Senior on Campus and Ends Own Life.

Porter Macdougal Smith of Chicago, traveling representative of the R. P. Smith Sons Company of Chicago, wholesale shoe dealers, shot and fatally wounded Miss Helen Ayer Marden, a senior in Smith College, Northampton, Mass., who had broken her engagement with him, and then committed suicide by turning the revolver upon himself. Miss Marden died a few hours later. She was a daughter of Frank Marden, of Somerville, Mass.

Smith, who was about 25 years old, was graduated from Dartmouth College a year ago last June. He had since been traveling for the company of which his uncle, Edward E. Smith, of Chicago, is president. For several days prior to the shooting he had been in Northampton trying to renew the engagement. Miss Marden evaded him and sent him word that his attentions must cease. He persistently followed her, and she apparently was afraid of him, for she kept away from chapel exercises, at which Smith was accustomed to meet and speak to her. At Thursday morning's chapel Smith was seen at his usual post, and when Miss Marden did not appear he started in the direction of her dormitory. Before he reached the dormitory the girl came out and they met.

No one was near enough to hear what words passed between the two, but a second or two after the meeting Smth was seen to draw a revolver and fire three shots at Miss Marden. She fell and he then sent a bullet into his brain that caused his death before a number of workmen on the campus could reach his side. Miss Marden was taken to Dickinson Hospital, where she died shortly before noon. Two bullets entered her back near the neck and a third entered her head.

NATIONAL DEBT IS GROWING.

Expenditures for Month of April $3,000,000 Larger than Receipts.

The monthly statement of the public debt shows that at the close of business April 30 the debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,025,983,825, which is an increase for the month of $3,207,308. The total cash in the treasury is $1,725,479,434, against which there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $1,448,045,599, which leaves a cash balance on hand of $277,433,835. The government receipts for April were $52,075,974 and expenditures $55,050,620.

The monthly coinage statement shows the total coinage executed during April agregates $31,851,614, of which $30,041,000 was gold, $1,172.00 silver and $38,614 minor coins. The monthly circulation statement shows national bank notes outstanding $687,648,227, a decrease for the year of $10,237,471 and an increase for the month of $3,001,612.

Woman Bound, Gagged and Robbed.

The wife of Dr. C. M. Mann, reported to the police that she had been bound and gagged in her home in 111th street, New York, by a strange man, who started to rob the house but was scared away by two bulldogs. The man, however, got $500 worth of jewelry and silverware.

Steel Wages Not to Be Cut.

There is general rejoicing in the Pittsburg region over the unofficial announcement that the United States Steel Corporation will not reduce the wages of its employes. The news came from the New York office that there had been no intention to reduce wages.

BURGLAR STOPS FIRE; CAUGHT.

Waits to Put Out Flames He Started and Comes to Grief.

To save the lives of eight persons who were asleep in the house, most of them women, Carroll Higgins, a confessed burglar, turned firgman in the home of Rev. Jacob J. Bernthal in St. Louis, and at the risk of capture remained to extinguish the blaze. While taking silverware from the sideboard in the dining-room of the clergyman's home a candle the burglar held in his hand set fire to draperies hanging near by. Higgins tore down the blazing draperies with his hands, blistering the skin, but prevented the fire from spreading. When all was over he went through the apartments of each sleeping member of the family and helped himself to silverware and jewelry. "When the fire started I could have 'ducked' right there, but I knew if I did those women asleep up stairs would probably be burned to death or hurt, so I stuck," Higgins said after his arrest. "Every minute I expected them to smell the smoke and come downstairs, but they didn't."

NEBRASKA MORTGAGES GROW.

The city real estate mortgages filed in 1908 aggregated $13,856,522.24. City mortgages released during 1908 numbered 9,973, amounting to $9,004,751.73. During 1908 there were 71,049 chattel mortgages filed, amounting to $34,410,250.39. During the same period the released numbered 46,902, securing $19,011,596.46.

On a wager of $500 Charles Lamble, St. Paul, agreed to walk to Seattle, 1,912 miles, in ninety days.

"Eddie" Dugan, the jockey, is back in New York after having failed to procure in England a jockey's license.

The French Prix de Palaisan was won by W. K. Vanderbilt's Northeast. Nash Turner's Pillard was second.

At Nottingham, England, the Littlejohn plate of 200 sovereigns for 2-year-olds, distance four furlongs, was won by H. P. Whitney's Oversight, ridden by J. H. Martin.

As a result of the efforts of a number of prominent Yale and Princeton alumni it appears probable that the 'varsity crews of these two universities will meet in a dual regatta on Carnegie Lake.

Another runner looking for Marathon honors, with the hope of a contest with St. Yves, Dorando or Longboat, has arrived in New York. He is "Indian" Simpson, who has been winning laurels in Canada.

Charley Comiskey announced that he had chosen Catcher Billy Sullivan as manager for the White Sox this season, to succeed Fielder Jones. This action was generally expected and was what Chicago fans wanted.

H. O. Messier and G. R. Schubert, of Milwaukee, are arranging for a seven nights' heel and toe walking match, the contest to be open to the world. The racing hours will be three each evening, and eight hours on the last day.

ROOSEVELT PARTY GETS LIONS.

Three Killed by One Shot Apiece by Ex-President.

Four lions are trophies of Theodore Roosevelt's camp in the Mau Hills near Nairobi, British East Africa, and the two hundred or more native followers joined with the American party in the celebration of the unusually good luck.

The lions were bagged Friday, and Mr. Roosevelt's mighty gun brought three of them to earth, each on the first shot. Thus one of the former President's fondest ambitions has been realized, and he is proud, too, that the fourth of the jungle kings fell before the rifle of his son Kermit, who, however, took three shots to kill his quarry. Both father and son are jubilant. It was their first lion hunt and so magnificent a kill was far beyond their expectations, but lions have been plentiful in the hills for the last month, and the English hunter, F. C. Selous, has been out for several days laying plans for their extinction.

Mr. Selous accompanied the former President, who also was attended by the usual retinue of beaters. As a rule the beaters go into the jungle with considerable trepidation, but as Mr. Roosevelts' reputation as a hunter had reached there long before he arrived in person the beaters on this occasion were exceptionally enthusiastic. They seemed ever eager to play a part in the first hunt of the distinguished American.

HOLLAND'S HEIR IS DAUGHTER.

Popular Hope of a Son to Succeed to Throne Is Disappointed.

Queen Wilhelmina of Holland Friday morning gave birth to a daughter.

Queen Wilhelmina was married to Prince Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin Feb. 7, 1901. The queen is now in her twenty-ninth year, having been born Aug. 31, 1880. She came of age Aug 31, 1898, but had previously been queen for eight years, having succeeded her father, the late King Willem III., Nov 23, 1890.

The queen's marriage to Prince Henry was said to be the result of a love match pure and simple. She had been sought in marriage many times and often reported engaged, but she refused with a determination that surprised her counsellors this or that prince. Prince Henry was at the time of the marriage in 1901 a handsome young German military lieutenant attached to the battalion of chasseurs in the Prussian Guard.

The birth of a son to Queen Wilhelmina might in the course of time cause her to retire from the throne owing to the status of the Salic law in Holland. Her son, when 18 years old and legally of age, would probably be crowned king and assume the throne. A daughter, on the other hand, will succeed her mother should she outlive her.

J. HASEN HYDE SENTENCED.

Former Equitable Life Official Ordered to Jail and Pay $100.

James Hasen Hyde, of New York, formerly vice president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and his chauffeur, Lawdics, were sentenced in Paris in default, Mr. Hyde to one month's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $100, and Ladwice to a month's imprisonment and to pay $30. They were charged with running into a public taxicab last October and injuring a passenger. The complainants asserted that after the accident Ladwice sped away. Under a law passed last July flight after an accident is a special offense. At present Mr. Hyde is on an automobile trip in the Riviera.

HEPBURN LAW UPHELD BUT ROADS NOT HURT

Supreme Court Finds Commodities Clause Good, but Takes Away Its Effect.

COAL LINES NOT TO SUFFER

Government Interpretation Held to Be All Wrong and Things Will Go On as Before.

The railroads won a unique and substantial victory Monday when the United States Supreme Court, through Justice White, handed down a decision declaring the "commodities clause" of the Hepburn act constitutional, but placing an interpretation upon it which will not compel the carriers to part with their coal properties.

The decision, however, in the case of the Lehigh Valley and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western roads at least, requires a divorcement of their coal properties. The victory was unique, because the arguments of the Attorney General in favor of the clause, as well as the arguments of the railroad attorneys against the clause, were lost efforts so far as the Supreme Court was concerned.

The decision upholds the constitutionality of the clause, but declares that its interpretation by the government under which it was endeavoring to compel the railroads to part with their coal lands, is a false interpretation. Therefore, were the arguments of the railroad lawyers combatting the government's interpretation useless. Both the government and the railroads were, so to speak, "barking up the wrong tree."

The decision, however, does not indicate that the court would view with hostility an amendment by Congress to the commodities clause prohibiting common carriers from owning the securities of corporations whose commodities they transport.

Robs Law of Its Effect.

The effect of the Supreme Court's pronouncement is to make abortive the purpose for which the commodities clause was incorporated in the Hepburn amendment, for it makes it possible for the railroads to do by indirection what they cannot do directly—namely, own coal mines and transport the products therefrom. In order to do this, however, it becomes necessary for a railroad company either to organize a subsidiary company which shall be the legal owner of the mines, or in the event of the railroad company's owning its mines direct, then it will become necessary for it to dispose in good faith of the output of the mines before it transports the same.

In other words, the decision places the seal of approval upon the commodities clause, but insists that it does not mean that a railroad company may not own stock in another company which controls coal mines the product of which the railroad company transports to market, nor does it mean that if such a railroad company owns its mines direct, it cannot transport their product, provided it first parts with it before it becomes interstate traffic. The decision, therefore, practically gives the approval of the highest tribunal in the land to the method which is now being pursued by all western coal owning roads and by the majority of the eastern coal owning roads, of mining and selling the products of their mines.

MINE EXPLOSION INJURES SEVEN

Use of Forbidden Powder Leads to a Panic in a Coal Pit.

An explosion of powder 2,000 feet under ground in the Arona mine of the Keystone Coal Company, at Arona, Pa., seriously injured seven miners and caused a panic among 200 others. The men were riding into the mine on a train of electric cars for the day's work, when the explosion took place. All fled toward the entrance. Finding there was no evidence of gas, some of the men returned and attended the injured men, who were taken to a hospital at Greensburg. Fulminite was used in the mine and the use of powder was forbidden by the company. It is believed a can of five pounds was being smuggled into the mine and was ignited by a spark from the trolley.

WINS SUIT AND HIS SON.

J. S. Cabanne Granted Divorce and Custody of Recently Stolen Boy.

James Shepard Cabanne Jr. has obtained a divorce from Mrs. Minnie Leonard Cabanne Brandenburg and was granted the custody of their son, whom Broughton Brandenburg of New York recently took to San Francisco. Mr. Cabanne has returned from the Western city, where he regained possession of the boy. The divorce case was on the default docket and no defense was offered. The prayer of the plaintiff alleged desertion. Mrs. Cabanne has asserted that she obtained a divorce from her former husband in British Honduras before she was married to Brandenburg.

Will Build Big Lake Ship.

The Erie and Western Transportation Company, a Pennsylvania Railroad subsidiary company operating the Anchor Line on the great lakes, has placed a contract for a 5,000-ton steel package freight steamer, to be called the Conemaugh. She will be a sister ship of the Wissahickon, which was placed in service in August, 1907.

Race for a Wife

BY

CHAPTER XXII.—(Continued.)

"Foolish business, Gren, very, I'm afraid," he replied at length. "Nobody I'd sooner give her to, providing she's willing to take you."

"My dear uncle, Maude and I——"

"Pooh! You needn't go on about that. I never doubted that you and Maude had settled it all before you did me the honor to consult me. But what are you to live on? Your £400 a year won't keep a wife, Gren, and I can't help you."

"No, but we can wait a bit; we are both young, and I shall be making two or three hundred a year at my profession very soon."

"Nonsense, boy; I know the law. I thoroughly believe you to be clever and have no doubt the money will come in course of time, but it's slow work—very. Long engagements are not judicious."

"But this is not to be so very long; and Maude is good to wait a couple of years or so for me."

"A couple of years," smiled the squire. "What did the fee-book say last year. Fifty pounds."

"Not quite; very near it, though."

"I'm afraid you'll find it will take all two years to double it. I don't doubt your doing well at last, but it takes time, it takes time. Still, Gren, I'll not gainsay the match, and if at the end of next year you can see your way into something like £300 a year, exclusive of what you have, make a wedding of it, if you like."

"Ten thousand thanks, uncle. This case of yours will find me practice, see if it don't. I have no intention of hiding my light under a bushel. I'll take very good care, through my friends, the case is well talked of. Only wait till the Two Thousand is over, and see what details the sporting papers shall have of it! Good-by. I will just run up and see my aunt and Maude, and then I'm off."

Grenville dashed into the drawing room, where he found Mrs. Denison and his cousin.

"I'm just off to town, aunt, and have come to wish you good-by, and to tell you I'm to be your son-in-law, after all."

"Don't believe him, my mother," laughed Maude, her eyes dancing with fun. "We know better than that don't we? We mustn't detain him, or he'll be too late for his dinner. You greedy thing; you won't live if you gourmandize so——"

"Come here, Gren," said Mrs. Denison; "has my husband consented to your marrying Maude?"

"Yes, aunt, as soon as I've got bread and cheese enough to feed her on."

"My dear boy, I'm so glad! I was obliged to be your enemy once, Gren—I couldn't help myself; but I'd rather you took her than anyone!"

"Oh you, mother!" cried Maude; "and he says he'll feed me on bread and cheese, and I like, I like—strawberries and cream."

"Sad thing, aunt, but I suppose I'd better break off the match at once. Better that than come to a separate maintenance, you know. Bread and cheese is a good lasting dish, but how she's to get through the winters I don't know, on what she proposes."

"Ah, well, never mind," laughed Maude; "she's yours now, and won't have a separate maintenance. You'll have to feed her some way and you can't guess how she eats. When are you going, Gren?"

"In a very few minutes. I'm going to walk; will you come with me? Good-by, aunt. Don't be afraid. I won't run away with her, at all events till strawberries are well in, and threpence a pottle."

"Listen; were lovers like that in your day, mother? I used to dream, a little while back, that when you had a lover, it was all you could do to keep him from running away with you. Now I'm getting quite clever about it, and know that Gren would always much prefer to leave me behind than his portmanteau."

"Come away, Maude, and let's see if we can shut it; you know we always have a deal of trouble about that."

"Oh, yes, I always found you and Thomas despairing over it, and it takes all my ingenuity to make these last three or four packages fit in. Don't you think he's making a wife of me, mother, a little before he's entitled to?"

"Go away, you foolish children. You can quarrel and make up all the way to the station."

The refractory portmanteau was soon reduced to subjection under Maude's clever auspices, and then the two cousins walked across the fields to the station.

"Your father's given you to me, Maude, as soon as I can get together an income that we can live upon."

She might be coquettish before her mother, but she was meek enough to her lover when they were alone together.

"I hope I shall be a good wife to you, Gren. You know I'm not extravagant, however I may laugh about it."

"No, my darling, I know you better; and if we have to begin with a little, I hope you'll be able to spend lots of money before long."

"I never had any money to spend," said the girl, gravely. "I've often had to want a five-pound note, both for myself and my poor people in the village."

"And will have again, pet. Wanting money is the normal condition of ninety-nine hundredths of civilized humanity. But you must turn back now, you have come far enough. Good-by, and God bless you," said Rose, as he clasped her in his arms. "Mine now, forever, isn't it?"

"Yes, Gren. Yours or no one's," she replied, as she lifted her lips shyly to his. "Please write."

"Every day, dearest. Good-by;" and, with one more kiss, Grenville Rose tore himself away.

How he traveled up to town in the same carriage with Pearman we have already seen. On his arrival at Waterloo Station he jumped into a cab, and proceeded at once to the Temple. On entering his rooms the first thing that caught his eye was the figure of Silky Dallison, who, comfortably ensconced in the easiest chair in the room, was making, apparently, some abstruse calculations on a piece of paper, and referring frequently for guidance to a gaily bound betting book.

"All right, old fellow," he said, in return to Grenville's greeting. "Wanted to have a talk to you; knew you would come up by that train; told the old party to get food for two at half-past seven—wants just ten minutes. Go and wash your hands, while I finish what I am about."

After the "bit of fish and beefsteak" that constitute an ordinary bachelor dinner in chambers, the two began to smoke.

"Now," said Dallison, "shall be back to dinner' of course meant, as we agreed it should, that Pearman had yielded to your terms. I was off to Plyart directly I got your message, and we have had a busy afternoon of it. We rather woke up the Subscription Room at Knightsbridge, I flatter myself. From being an outsider in the betting, we brought Coriander back to 7 to 2, and made him once more first favorite. I told you we had Pearman in a hole, and we had. I suppose you got a lot of money out of him?"

"Yes, indeed; we made him pay £10,000 to let off our claim." And then Grenville recounted his interview with Pearman.

"Very good; then he's now absolute master of the horse again. Of course, exactly what I expected from your telegram. Now I'll tell you what I've done. In the first place, I laid, between us, or rather Plyart did for us, £3,300 to £1,200 against Coriander; that was before he was driven back in the betting; of course that left us to win £1,200 if he was beat or didn't start. After getting your telegram I went down to Tattersall's, and, with Plyart's assistance, got that whole £1,200 on the horse at long odds. We now stand to win, between us £10,170 if Coriander wins the Two Thousand, and just quits if he loses. Not a bad book, Grenville?"

"By Jove! no; and he's a good chance, hasn't he?"

"Yes, on previous running, wonderful. We know Pearman has backed him to win him a lot of money. It's not likely he would have paid you £10,000 to-day unless he was very confident about his chance. To wind up with, his own commissioner backed him to-day for a good bit of money, although he had to take shortish odds, owing to our having appropriated all the long prices against the colt."

Grenville's eyes sparkled, though he said nothing, but smoked on in silence for a minute or two. Yes, if that should come off, he might marry Maude at once!

Dallison had regarded him intently. Suddenly he broke silence:

"I saw your eye flash up, and then you plunged into a reverie. I had forgotten the stake you told me you had on this, when you first spoke to me about it. Whether it's been any good to go so far, of course I don't know; but you stand as fair a chance as a man can do of winning £5,080 next week, if that will help you at all. There's no certainly about anything in this world—about how long it's been a world, or about how long we've been preying on each other in it. Practically, mind, we are as much cannibals as ever, and eat each other up with as much alacrity as the Feejee Islanders. A good heavy city swindle gulps us down much as a whale takes herrings; but there's plenty of pike about, who do their cannibalism one at a time, and not by the shoal. Old Pearman was a pike of renown; in fact, he might have aspired to the dignity of a shark, if he hadn't been of a retiring disposition, and ever anxious to hide his light under a bushel. Young Pearman has a fair dash of the pike about him, too. Which way he can make most money out of Coriander I don't know; but I should think, by winning; and if I'm right in my conjecture, bar accidents, we shall win our money, Gren."

"And if it is the other way?"

"Shan't lose it, thank goodness! But I'm afraid if his book makes up a few hundreds better on the lose, Coriander will not run up to his previous performances. We've done pretty well; win or lose, we stand a big stake to nothing. Good-night."

Grenville mused far into the night. Yes, he had been playing for high stakes lately, and winning game after game. Let this only come off, and he should have fairly won his sweet cousin. Then the thought came into his head that he must see it, and then it flashed across him that Maude must be with him. How he was to manage it, he didn't know. As inspirations flash across mankind, so do superstitions. Coriander's winning the Two Thousand depended upon Maude and him being there to see.

"Ridiculous!" you'll say. There is pretty well as much romance and superstition going about the world as heretofore; but our nineteenth century training teaches us, above all things, not to lay ourselves open to ridicule. We may inwardly admit such things; we don't acknowledge them.

Uncle Hank's Idea.

It was Uncle Hank's first ride in a parlor car. The porter came around and brushed him down with a whisk broom.

"How much, bub?" drawled Uncle Hank, fumbling around in his pocket for a nickel.

"Quarter will do, sah," responded the porter, with open palm.

"Quarter will do? Say, do I get the whisk broom, too, for that?"

Sure Enough.

Work of Congress

An exhaustive treatment of the lumber schedule of the tariff bill by Mr. Simmons of North Carolina was the feature of the session of the Senate Wednesday. Mr. Simmons spoke for three and a half hours in support of the retention of the present tariff, which, he maintained, was but a revenue rate. Several times the national Democratic platform of 1908, which declared for free lumber, was injected into the discussion by Republican Senators, and Mr. Bacon of Georgia remarked that he was not bound by declarations written into a platform at midnight by a few interested men.

-:—:-

The entire time of the Senate was again Thursday given to the general discussion of the tariff bill. Senator Rayner of Maryland led off with a general denunciation of the protective system of the Republican party, and was followed by Senator Nelson of Minnesota, who made an earnest plea for the admission of lumber free of duty. His assertions aroused a general discussion, which was participated in by Senators Hale, Warren, Carter, Clapp, McLaurin, McCumber, Elkins, Aldrich and Gallinger. In an eleven-minute session the House did not take up any of the important business which will have to be considered this session. Mr. Wanger (Pa.) endeavored to obtain the adoption of a resolution of good will and friendliness for the people of Turkey and the new sovereign, but as Mr. Macon (Ark.) objected the matter went over. At 12:11 p. m. the House adjourned to meet again at noon on Monday.

-:—:-

An extended speech by Senator McCumber favoring free lumber occupied several hours in the Senate Friday. His remarks provoked an extended controversy among advocates of a tariff on lumber. Mr. McCumber said while he was a thorough protectionist, he would not agree to a tariff on products such as coal, iron ore, lumber and oil, that are being exhausted and cannot be replaced. Senator Aldrich reported from the committee on finance additional amendments to the tariff bill and the Senate adopted a motion made by him that until further notice the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock daily. At 6:05 the Senate adjourned until 11 o'clock Monday. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

An extended defense of the lumber duty provided in the Dingley bill was made in the Senate Monday by Mr. Piles of Washington. He was followed by Senator Borah, who discussed the income tax, declaring in favor not only of its justice as a means of raising revenue, but in view of the divided opinion in the Supreme Court of the United States, insisted also that it was the duty of Congress again to submit the question of the constitutionality of the tax to the court. It took the House just twenty mintues to meet and transact its business. In that time, however, the objectors got in their work with telling effect. Mr. Wanger of Pennsylvania again lost out on his resolution of congratulation to the Turkish people on the success of the recent revolution, unanimous consent being refused him; so did Mr. Hay, of Virginia, who wanted a lot of information from the Civil Service Commission regarding appointments, dismissals and resignations. A point of order by Mr. Payne of New York, the majority leader, against the adoption of a resolution to that end was sustained by the speaker, and before the subject could be pursued farther the House adjourned until Thursday.

-:—:-

Notable speeches provoking debate of intense interest characterized the session of the Senate Tuesday. Senator Dolliver of Iowa made an attack upon the methods under which protective tariff bills are formed and engaged in a constant exchange of words with Senator Aldrich, who was a careful listener to the address of the Iowa Senator. On the Democratic side Senators remained mute, no member of the minority interposing a word in the controversy over the tariff, which occupied Republican Senators alone. At times the debate threatened to be acrimonious, but the Iowa Senator was ever ready with a humorous retort, which called forth laughter at times when angry words seemed unavoidable. Senator Borah concluded his speech on the income tax, delivering an extended legal argument to show that there is ample reason for believing that the Supreme Court of the United States might reverse itself if the constitutionality of that tax should again be presented to it. A strong plea for the extension of the protective tariff system to jute was made by Senator Bradley of Kentucky, who declared that with the protective policy covering products of his State, Kentucky would be as safely Republican in the future as Massachusetts has been in the past

SHORT NEWS NOTES.

The Mecklenburg Hotel, a resort and sanitarium at Chase City, Va., valued at $200,000, insurance $75,000, was destroyed by fire.

Thoroughly overhauled, the old battle ship Massachusetts left the Brooklyn navy yard Thursday after being out of commission for two years.

The Imperial Company's large fertilizer plant at Money Point on the southern branch of the Elizabeth River, near Norfolk, Va., was destroyed by fire. Loss, $125,000, fully insured.

LIVES SNUFFED OUT BY STORM IN SOUTH

Nearly Thirty Persons Are Reported Killed and Many Injured in Three States.

ONE TOWN IS BLOWN AWAY

Lake Steamer Lost in Hurricane on Whitefish Bay—Blizzard Conditions in Northwest.

Between twenty and thirty persons are dead in Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas, and scores of injured were the total Thursday night of a series of tornadoes in those States. The storms which wrought this havoc appear to have been little outriders of the big disturbances which simultaneously were sweeping through the North.

Although more fatal to life than the Northern storm, these Southern tornadoes each covered only a small area of a few acres or a few square miles. They struck at widely scattered points at intervals.

The death list as received was as follows: Youngs Crossing, Tenn., five; Medina, Tenn., two; Horn Lake, Miss., twelve; Forest City, Ark., two; West Marion, Ark., one.

During the night telegraph wires went down all over the South, with the exception of the South Atlantic States. On both sides of the Mississippi, for hundreds of miles, it was a gusty night, with here and there a puff of wind which knocked trees over and which isolated many sections of the South for hours.

Memphis, Tenn., was the center of a storm that destroyed plantation buildings, caused loss of life and injury, and made useless many telephone and telegraph wires.

Near West Marion, Ark., the storm demolished twenty-four houses. Miss Nancy Young was killed and four persons were injured. Near Wheatley, Ark., a negro was killed. Near Horn Lake, Miss., plantation cabins were wrecked and twelve negroes killed.

At Raleigh, Tenn., a score of buildings were blown down and trees uprooted. Locke, Tenn., a village 18 miles from Memphis, was practically obliterated and a number of persons injured. At Youngs Crossing, near Jackson, Tenn., five persons were killed and many injured. In the vicinity of Medina, Tenn., two were killed. The wind cut a path half a mile wide through the towns of West Marion and Weakley and vicinity.

In Northern Arkansas, a dispatch from Fort Smith says, ninety persons were injured. At Plum Point a dozen houses were wrecked and one person was killed. Near Jackson, Tenn., seven persons were killed and others injured. At Medina three houses were wrecked.

Four persons were killed, at least twelve injured, and great damage done by a tornado in Golden, Mo. The town was destroyed, every building being razed.

It is the general opinion that it was the Corrigan line steamer Aurania which Capt. Boyce of the Peavey saw sink in Whitefish Bay. A furious storm raged over the upper lake region. Capt. Robert C. Pringle of Cleveland and a crew of twenty men were in charge of the Aurania when it left Buffalo for Lake Superior with coal.

A terrific wind and rain storm struck Chicago early Thurhday evening and left death and destruction in its wake. One man was killed outright, one fell dead from heart disease during the tumult, and nearly fifty were injured, some probably fatally. Twenty-five houses were blown down, many more unroofed, several set afire, and more than fifty families rendered homeless.

The extreme south end of the city was cut off from street car service and thrown into darkness by the destruction of electric light wires. A deluge of rain accompanied the wind, and west of the city hundreds of acres were flooded. Two inches of rain fell during the day and the evening. Telegraph and telephone wires were down in nearly every direction. A tidal wave in Lake Michigan did great damage in Waukegan and Kenosha.

RICH GIRL ON TRIAL FOR LIFE.

Faces Jury to Answer Charge of Slaying Sister's Sweetheart.

"Johnny" Davidson, a wealthy young woman, who killed Roy Ramsour in Neosho, Mo., on June 6, 1908, following a quarrel at the Davidson home, in which it is alleged Ramsour applied an epithet to the girl, is on trial there. Miss Davidson's plea is self-defense. Ramsour was a suitor for the hand of Miss Grace Davidson, the defendant's sister. A few days before the murder the two had quarreled. Ramsour used improper language toward Miss "Johnny" Davidson, and when he refused to retract she killed him with a revolver.

CRAZED BY THOUGHT OF LOSS.

Sight of Memorial Card Drives Mother to Murder and Suicide.

Driven insane apparently by the sight of a memorial card which she had ordered for her daughter Elsie, who died about a month ago, Mrs. Bernard Rister of Stafford Springs, Conn., beat Charles E. Emory of Boston, who had called to deliver the cards, on the head with an ax, inflicting serious wounds; shot and killed her 2-year-old son Bernard, and then took her own life by sending a bullet through her heart.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

While the stormy weather interfered with transportation and outdoor work, the course of trade shows steady progress. Aside from the commercial barometer and other favorable signs of returning activity the financial statistics furnish a healthy exhibit. April bank clearings testify to the increasing use of money. Aggregate discounts are seen to be well above the previous showing, and the decrease in gross deposits is largely due to withdrawals for investment and new enterprise.

Conditions in agriculture from now on will enter largely into calculations for the future. Reports show that farm work has become widely extended, and, while some fields are being plowed over, the actual acreage is much greater than at this time last year, especially for spring wheat and corn.

Manufacturing slowly reduces the idle capacity and another blast furnace resumed operations. Pig iron tonnages enter more frequently into third-quarter deliveries, while specifications for rails and structural steel add to the pressure at the mills.

Preparations are made for a larger movement of iron ore, coal and lumber. Receipts of the raw materials for factory consumption run in excess of those reported earlier this year. Heavy contracts impend for railway equipment, and the buying is good for structural forms, plates, wire and finished shapes. Metal values reflect no special change, but there is firmness in furnace product, hides, leather and hard woods.

Wholesale merchandise markets find the demand equaling expectations, and some increase is noted in mail orders for fall goods. Leading retail trade here and at the interior would be better with higher temperatures.

Failures reported in Chicago district number 23, against 32 last week, 39 in 1908 and 15 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 8 last week, 9 in 1908 and 3 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Summed up, the situation may be said to be a current trade, wholesale and retail better than last year, but disappointing as a whole, while the tone for the future is still quite markedly optimistic.

Reports from leading industries are rather better than for some time past. The business doing and the reports coming from the iron and steel trades are distinctly better. Low prices have evidently brought out slumbering orders and there is talk of the bottom having been touched and a new ascent begun. In the textile trades, quiet as to the present, but optimism as to the future is the rule.

Cotton goods still lead the rest of the market, but the strength of raw wool seems to point to confidence in finished lines. High prices are being paid in the West for the new wool clip, shearing of which is active. The leather trades are strong, sole leather being active and hides higher. Shoe orders are below normal, but improving.

Coal is in better demand, and, the new agreement for three years in anthracite being signed, stability and peace are certain for a long period. Coke is still weak and low in price. Lumber is irregular, despite activity in building, and southern production is slackening. Naval stores are close to or below cost of production.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with April 29 were 268, against 247 last week, 282 in this week last year, 163 in 1907, 139 in 1906 and 193 in 1905.

Failures in Canada for the week number 21, against 36 last week and 22 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

EVERY BATTLESHIP IS TO BE REMODELED

Superstructures Will Be Taken Off, Leaving Only Lookout Masts as Target for Opponents' Fire.

CRAFT WILL LOOK LIKE BARGES

Changes Will Make Vessels Ride Foot Higher in Water and Raise Armor Belt Considerably.

As rapidly as possible the battleships of the 'round-the-world fleet are being laid up at navy yards, and this fact has caused the report that the ships returned from the journey in bad shape. It had been reported in Washington that masts were sprung, plates were loosened, the intricate electrical machinery, including the fire control, was hopelessly out of working order, and that generally the trip had made a wreck of the United States Navy. At the War Department it was said that on the contrary the ships had stood the voyage even better than had been expected, and that none of them would fail if called upon to go into battle to-morrow.

But the Navy Department has decided on a radical change in the type of battle-ship, and the sixteen that made the world trip are to be remodeled. When the change has been made the modern American fighting vessel will look like an immense barge with a few turrets on it. All of the cumbersome superstructure of the present ships is to be taken off. Instead of the fighting masts and the upper decks that have been found of no use and in the way, there will be only one wire "waste basket" mast for the purpose of signaling and as a roost for the lookout.

It was found in the shooting tests at the "Florida" last year that it is practically impossible to shoot away that sort of mast. There are more holes than strands and even if a number of the wire cable strands are cut by shot, they are so interwoven that the stability of the mast is not affected.

The turrets for the big guns, fore and aft, and the funnel and boilers, of course, will remain. The removal of the superstructure and masts will not only offer less of a target to the enemy and make it possible for those aboard the ships to fight with greater certainty, but it will considerably lighten the ships and bring the armor belt farther above the water line. Every sixty-five tons removed from the weight of a battle-ship, as at present constituted, raises the ship an inch. It is expected that the ships will be raised a foot in the water. This would change the center of gravity and create the danger that the ship might "turn turtle" in heavy weather were it not that the weight is to be taken off the top.

The innovation will not only raise the armor belt, the present position of which has been attacked, but it will raise the secondary batteries of the vessels to a point where they will be more effective.

LAND DEALS MAKE PARSON RICH

Rev. Richard A. Morley Does Some Shrewd Speculating.

A formal real estate transfer made in the routine of the County Recorder's office in Chicago the other day revealed the story of a minister of the gospel, who has gained a fortune of $500,000 during his spare time from preaching. Four years ago he left Chicago with slender means to nurse a daughter back to health. To-day he is the owner of landed estates and an exclusive metropolitan apartment building. The hero of this fairy tale of finance and religion is the Rev. Richard A. Morley, a Methodist Episcopal pastor, who was stationed for several years in Chicago and Oak Park churches. The story came out in the purchase by the minster of the Kenwood, the apartment hotel at Kenwood avenue and 47th street, for $400.000.

Rev. Mr. Morley, who is 45 years old, was pastor of various churches in Chicago until, in 1904, the health of his daughter began to fail and he exchanged pastorates with the Rev. A. C. Geyer, of Las Vegas, N. M., whither he went in an effort to save his child from tuberculosis. He made his money in land speculation in New Mexico, but never missed a single service at his church.

REPEATS CHAPTER BACKWARD.

Woman Is Heroine at Experience Meeting of Methodist Church.

"Learn a whole chapter from the Bible, so you can say it backward, and I'll give you a dollar, mother," said Edward Field, of Austin, Ill., when he learned that the Ladies' Aid Society of the First Methodist Church had arranged an experience social to aid its missionary work. "Done," said his mother. "I'll begin at once," and the other night she was the heroine of the hour as she reeled off verse after verse backward.

Pythian Convention

By Mrs. W. C. DeLong.

Red Cross Temple No. 47 of Auburn very royally entertained the First District Convention of Pythian Sisters, in their beautiful and spacious hall on Wednesday, April 28, 1909. The morning session consisted of reception of delegates and visitors. At noon a splendid chicken dinner was served in the dining room to about 200. The secret session of the afternoon opened at 1:30 with D. D. G. C. Mrs. Dot B. Luckey of Wolf Lake, in the chair. Mrs. Mary Beidler, of No. 47, gave the address of welcome which was beautifully responded to by Mrs. Lina Jacob Williams of No. 36. Roll call brought forth a response from twenty-five Temples, with good reports. Wawaka, being the only one not responding. Angola reported a severe loss by fire, and a collection was taken at this time, for their benefit which amounted to over eleven dollars.

An impressive paper was read by Mrs. Kate Kuhns, of No. 107, on "True Sisterhood." After miscellaneous business, the public session opened at 3:45 with song, "America". Several visitors were in attendance. After prayer came a piano solo by Mrs. Wygent, then a reading by Miss Winifred Rood, of Goshen, which was loudly applauded. Dr. Nusbaum gave a fine talk on "Pythianism", followed by a vocal solo by his daughter, Miss Geraldine. A trio by Auburn ladies, a piano solo by Mrs. Feil, and a reading by Miss Thelma Grover, were all appreciated. The Grand Chief, Mrs Luna King, then gave a very interesting and instructive address. After benediction supper was served by the ladies of the Presbyterian church in their basement to about 230 ladies.

At 7:15 the evening session opened in form by Red Cross No. 47, who exemplified the initiatory work in a pleasing manner, showing they had carefully studied their ritual, as their mistakes were few. Kendallville team No. 147, with Mrs. Frank Lyle as captain, gave a fancy drill which brought forth loud applause and commendation. Miss Genevieve Dutter, of Angola Temple No. 36, rendered a pretty solo, "In Sunny Spain". A few talks on "How can we improve our temples" by the Most Excellent Chiefs brought out mainly, the fact that improvement could easily be obtained by studing the Laws and Ritual and then obeying them. The G. C. then answered all queries in a satisfactory manner. Letters were read from Past Grand Chief, Mrs. Carrie M. Fanning of Butler, and M. Josie Nelson, Supreme M. of R. & C. regretting their inability to be present at the convention. The Sisters all felt highly honored by having with them several of the Grand Officers. After report of various committees, district treasurer and secretary, the session closed in form. Punch was then served.

Red Cross Temple did herself proud in manner in which she entertained the convention of 234 ladies, who all seemed to enjoy all sessions and carried home many good thoughts. About 100 Auburn ladies were present, making a total of 334. Butler No. 126 invited the convention to their city next year, and the invitation was readily accepted.

Ten Doctors Said He Would Die

"In 1903 we wrote you regarding my husband, who was suffering from heart trouble. He was superanuated by the North Georgian Conference. Ten doctors at different times said he would die. You advised Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Restorative Nervine; we did as advised, and improvement was apparent from the very first. He recovered and the Conference in 1904 gave him a charge. He never felt better, although he has very heavy work and does a great deal of camp meeting work. I am so glad we took your advice and gave him the medicine, and feel that I ought to let you know of the wonderful good results from its use."

MRS. T. S. EDWARDS,
Milner, Ga.

This proves what Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy will do. Get a bottle from your druggist and take it according to directions. It does not matter whether your heart is merely weak, or you have organic trouble, if it does not benefit you take the empty bottle to your druggist and get your money back.

Culture Club.

Tuesday evening, Apr. 27, at the home of Mrs. H. W. Krabill occured the last and one of the most interesting meetings of the year. At this time occured the election of officers for another year. The following officers were elected:- Pres. Mrs. H. W. Bowman; Vice Pres., Mrs. Blanche Leighty; Sec., Mrs. Eva Sheffer; Critic, Mrs. Kate Leighty; Treas., Mrs. Harriet Johnson, and Press Corr., Miss Eva Ridgway. This was the first year for the Culture Club and it is hoped that it may be only the beginning of many benificial and pleasant years for the ladies of this organization. There has been much interest manifested all the year and many were absent but one night and one was present at every meeting.

Let the new year come and bring with it it's usual amount of work and let us be ready to give it our time and best talent. Someone has said that if we hope to benefit mankind we must live outside of self. Self culture sought for its own sake would not make a very bright light in the world. Our talents of every kind must subserve some higher good to be really valuable possessions.

Let us build more stately mansions,
As the swift seasons roll;
Leave our low vaulted past!
Build each new temple nobler than the last,
Shutting us from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till we at length are free,
Leaving our out-grown shells by life's unresting sea.

"Polliwogs".

A Toast Written by Lee O. Tustison of Dennison, Texas, and Read by Laura Woodcox at the Annual Alumni Banquet, last Friday Evening.

Mr. Toastmaster,-Fellow Graduates and Friends.—

Another commencement season is here and you have gathered again in honor of those who have earned the laurels of graduation. You are here, with them, to enjoy the feast of good things, the hearty handshake and a renewal of acquaintances. Every previous event of this kind has been filled with pleasure, and I deeply regret that I am not permitted to be with you this evening. Especially is this true since these "Polliwogs" who have wiggled their way to this present position, began their High School experience under my supervision. It has been sometime since I witnessed their flounderings in learning's pool, and it would be pleasant, indeed, to see them after their High School metamorphosis, ready to hop out into the world of activities. Although, tonight, I am within the borders of the "Lone Star" my "Hoosier" instinct tells me you are certain to have a good time. It is not mine to enjoy the feast along with you, but I desire to thank the committee who so kindly extended the privilege to serve up a zoological trentise on "Polliwogs". This toast might have been listed as "The Tale of the Tadpole". The committee probably reasoned, however, that before this metamorphic elaboration had ended, the tale (tail) would have disappeared and left an entirely different subject. So I am content and also highly pleased to deal with "Polliwogs".

When a small boy, in brief pants, briefer shirt and minus shoes and stockings, I often waded in a pond, situated in the midst of a timber growth, one-half mile from our humble home. 'Twas here in company with neighbor boys, that rafts were built and expeditions planned which ended in an attack on savage snapping-turtle and the spearing of a number of the wary and dexterous frog. In this same pond were countless numbers of swimming creatures with greatly enlarged heads, which we learned to know as "Polliwogs" or "Tadpoles". Some one of us had heard that these could be caught with red flannel as bait, but although we fished for hours not a single "Polliwog" did we catch. Probably they regarded our bait as a danger signal and kept away. Be this as it may, our childish minds regarded these little water creatures as rather mysterious, and when some older head told us that they would later develope into frogs, we regarded his information as a fairy tale which added romance to their presence and increased the mystery surrounding them.

LEE O. TUSTISON

In later years, zoological research made clear the process of the metamorphic change whereby a creature of lower form developed into one capable of higher and more powerful activities. The two most common examples brought to our notice were the change of the lowly caterpillar into a beautiful butterfly and the complete transformation of a tadpole into a frog. Of the two, the latter was to me the most interesting, so I decided to watch the change.

Two "Polliwogs" were captured and placed in a glass fruit jar. For many days they remained near the bottom oftentimes apparently lifeless. Finally, however, they began to rise higher in the jar and would occasionally come to the surface for air. Upon careful examination, I could see the development of tiny legs on their bodies. Although the polliwogs did not increase in size, their legs extended and their tails were either absorbed or dropped off. Our polliwogs had changed into frogs and were able to hop and swim wherever they willed. The same life changed into a form of more grace and higher ability.

This change fairly illustrates the transformation from lower to higher life continually going on all about us. In fact, Life means change, and in the process of change the most beautiful and powerful life is the one that suffers all the hardships incident to progress, and toils on until the desired end is reached. You have all, no doubt, heard how the man who witnessing the struggles of a butterfly in freeing itself from the crysallis, took pity upon it and broke the prison walls thus helping the butterfly to escape. His kindness, however, proved a detriment, as the struggle was necessary to produce strength and beauty in the butterfly, and what would have been a beautiful creature was dwarfed and homely. Four seasons of the year are all in turn necessary to produce one stalk of wheat; and it is through the travail of mutation of Seasons that Earth bears her choicest fruits. And so, country girl or statesman, you shall drink the bitter potion that is the penalty of success. Man's business is to work—to surmount difficulties, to endure hardships, to solve problems, to overcome the inertia of his own nature—this is to live!

So, tonight, 'tis thus I speak to you who have labored through the requirements of a local school course; who have already begun to live in a higher realm and understand some of the beauties and possibilities that result from the struggles lately experienced. And especially do I speak to you who have lately graduated into our ranks and in whose honor we are here.—

When you came to me in the Autumn of 1906, you were in a sense, real "Polliwogs" or "Tadpoles". On that September morn when I took the pointer and stirred the pool of High School learning, I counted fifteen of you. Shy, bashful, timid creatures, apparently dazed by the possible vastness of the new world you were about to enter, and yet like the "polliwog" you were "big-headed" enough to face the future with at least a semblance of courage. And so, you were taken as found, and were fed a compound of Latine Scripore, terrestrial theories, rhetorical phrases and unknown quantities until your big head did swim and your mind was all in a muddle. The most of you by diligent application were able to surmount every difficulty, until at the end of the first week you began to think you were the big—there, I was going to say, 'the biggest toad in the puddle", but you were not toads then, so I will say the biggest Polliwogs in the pool. Weeks passed and lengthened into months. The arduous application to daily lessons became monotonous and a few of our "polliwogs" said, "O what's the use", and gave up in despair. The majority, however, persevered and shortly gained confidence and demonstrated their ability to take a higher and broader view of their surroundings. I am pleased to say that you five were among that number, else you would not be here this evening. The struggle still went on—continual work and worry over present lessons, and when these were solved still others to get. Ah, a Freshie's High School experience is indeed strenuous!

When I left you in the spring of 1907, it was plain to see who was happiest over their year's work and who had made most progress. In fact, some of you had grown to be such impertinent "Polliwogs" that occasionaly I could hear you croak in the very faces of more matute Juniors and well developed Seniors who were able to hop about at will. It was at this stage I turned you over to the "Tarbox". Here is where you met your real test. More difficult problems to solve, broader and more exacting propositions to face. You were even compelled to go with Caesar across the Rubicon and be present at the building of his famous bridge. This was too much for some of your number who died in the very midst of their High School experience. Five of you have shown the mettle that is in you and have patiently worked your way through the requirements of a High School course. The years of study were not all pleasure. If you could look back over your high school experience and see only flowery beds of ease, whereon you had dreamed your way along, you would not be happy at this, your commencement time. But, tonight, you are happy in the realization of something accomplished, and as you take a swift glance backward you find that the most pleasure comes with the knowledge of difficult problems solved and seemingly unsurmountable difficulties overcome. And so, as our guests tonight, we do not have the tender "Polliwogs" of many months ago, but five splendid High School "Frogs". A complete change has taken place. You are now equipped to earn your own way in the world and on account of your increased ability can take a broader and nobler view of life. My dear graduates, the change you have experienced during the past three years is life and and there is not one of you, tonight, but what would say that life is worth the living.

It has been some time since I have had experiences in common with you, yet I warrant you all capable of making a broad intellectual jump. Of course, I am not permitted to put you to test this evening but the world will shortly do so, and its requirements will keep you ever on the jump, sometimes with little hops and again with long strides that might carry you from Hoosier home to Texas land. Wherever the requirements of real life place you, my best wishes are yours, and I fully believe that you have pluck sufficient to "croak" in the face of difficulty and will ever be ready to "hop" into the thick of life's daily battle. And now since you are no longer "Polliwogs" but full grown frogs, I must leave you to my successor.

Sudden Death

The people in and around Spencerville were shocked early Sunday morning upon hearing of the sudden death of Mrs. Flora Shoemaker, who resides south of town. She had been in almost perfect health up to the time of her death. On Saturday she was about the place and engaged in her daily work and that evening was feeling as well as usual. About 10 o'clock she was taken with a severe cough which aroused her from her sleep and she immediately arose and started out of her room when her husband took hold of her and seated her on the bed. Her mother was called from another room but before she could get there Mrs. Shoemaker was dead. The cough was so severe that it was thot some portion of the inwards were broken making her death instant. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the M. E. church at Spencerville with Henry Beams as undertaker. A husband and four children are left to mourn their loss. It will be remembered by all our readers that the deceased was in the Wabash wreck at Danville, Ill., some few years ago and her life was nearly crushed out while her baby was killed in the horrible affray and to the time of her death was never relieved from suffering caused there while she seemed better at times. A full account of her life will be given in our next issue.

Large Crowds are Attending the Revival.

The following article is from our friend J. E. Sturgis, who is located at Bowling Green, Ky., and it will be of interest to many of our readers.

"One of the best sermons on that subject." This was the expressed opinion of many last night as they left the church. "A Good Conscience" was the subject. For development and application there have been few evangelistic discourses that surpassed it. Mr. Tinder's personality in every respect shows his never end for his work. His deep abiding confidence in the word of God is eminent throughout his every expression. Possessing a full, rich voice; pleasing pulpit manner; easy, flowing delivery, his audiences are carried along the development of his thought without weariness. He shows already wherein his power as a counsellor of men and a friend and companion of children.

Prof. Sturgis is a master in his own sphere as a leader of evangelistic singing and soloist. Perfectly at home with everyone, having gained the full confidence of his chorus and congregation the song services last night cheered and lifted every one for the great lesson that was given.

Tonight the Sunbeams will be used for the song service. His tact with children is remarkable. The short time given by them tell the training of the children is worth every effort of parents to have them present. His methods place them at ease, rouses their ambition and overcomes that diffidence that is such a distress to timid children.

Mr. Sturgis will have charge of the music at the State Y. P. S. C. E. Union Convention, which meets at Nicholasville, May 13, 14, 15. Those who have heard this soloist say the testimonials that had been given were very moderate ones. An opportunity to judge of his tact with children will be given on Friday afternoon at the great string service for children. Let every child bring a string, at 3:30 p. m., Friday.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

A FIXED CENTER.

By Henry F. Cope.

The heavens declare the glory of God.—Ps. 19:1.

Life runs steady only as it has some center. Those who are driven hither and thither by every wind and passing breeze of adversity or even of public opinion are those who have no unchanging center, no certainties in their lives. Our universe seems to find its fixed point in the pole star; where can our lives find the unvariable verities?

Strange to say, the modern man is able to enforce his religious faith from a source that his fathers feared most of all; science is the latest ally to religion. The final word of science, the most insistent, is that this is a universe of law, that nothing is left to chance, that all things are guided and ordered.

Now, it makes a tremendous difference whether we think of our world as thus under the sway of law, or whether we feel ourselves the helpless victims of a blind, blundering, uncertain set of accidents, called a universe, whether we are in a world where law reigns, where right is ever right because justice sits at the center.

Here one finds the stable, unchanging foundation, the pole star of being, that this is an orderly world, that the same effects always follow precisely the same causes, that this is a dependable universe. It will not mock good sowing with evil harvests, nor fail to follow the deed of darkness with the doom of death.

It is a good thing to be able to think of an all-wise, tender personality who has the reins of human destiny in hand, who, like a father, stoops down in pity to his children. But personality is ever fickle, time works its changes, any mind is subject to partiality. It seems a far higher conception that the universe itself is the expression of the life of this all-wise, loving, unfailing, unvarying Father of us all.

It is better yet to believe, even though blindly, that what I am as a thinking, hoping, aspiring, idealizing being is but a reflection of that which is the life of my world and the source of all life—better to live as in the presence of an eternal and infinite affection, energy and purpose than to fling myself down as the dust on the blind wheels of the world.

I may be uncertain in many ways as to what I mean when I speak of the Infinite Being; I may hesitate to use any term or even phrase here, and yet the great, determinative fact of my life, the motive of my whole being, may be this confidence that the law that is writ so large through all nature is the law that runs through all my universe, and that that law means justice, truth, right, and the realization of the best hopes found in me.

Thus to see life is to find its poise and sanity. Life is but madness until we find its meaning and its motive. The secret of strong, balanced living is living in the presence of the great facts of life, seeing life large, and whole, and far, relating one's self to the whole of our universe and knowing that as orderly, sane and good.

Men live daily by faith in the universe, by confidence that the seasons will return, that you can depend on nature giving as you sow. All living is based on the eternal verities of nature. Why can we not read this message for our own lives? Should not each returning day tell of the goodness that is ever new?

It is folly to look for some authoritative word revealing a good ruler of the world if you do not find goodness writ large and everywhere in the world as you have it. Why should we not trust the revelation of justice and affection in nature? Why should we not seek ourselves to learn the laws of life, to be in harmony with this universe of law and so to come at last to know the face of that life which has taught us life and love through the work of His fingers?

We need no dreams of dwelling beyond pearly gates; we need no promise of paradises of sloth or of fairy furnishings; all we need to make our lives full, and rich, and strong is this faith that the world is even now being made by right and truth, that no other way than that of the right is possible to the true man, that the love that passes our knowledge is over all and this love is the law for our lives and for our living.

UNDEVELOPED FORCES.

By Rev. Andrew Hageman.

Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward.—Exodus 14:15.

When the command of this text was spoken by Moses to the Israelites they were shut in completely. High mountains on either side, before them the great deep sea, behind them an embittered, cruel, determined foe. Calmly Moses is bidden by God to speak into the children of Israel that they go forward. You remember how that sea became a safe pathway to freedom and a fuller knowledge of a divine providence and grace. So God's forward call to-day to the undeveloped forces within us, if obeyed in as firm a faith, will be crowned with as marvelous results.

In putting into service these undeveloped forces of Christian manhood and womanhood, remember that the years of preparation or of slow progress in attaining our ideals or of apparent bitter defeat and failure are not lost to us. Much is accomplished in these struggles of the soul which only God and the individual really ever know. We may judge ourselves as only doing the little things, the hidden things, yet if these be well done like towers of strength, we will rise and be enabled to do greater things afterward for God.

Remember, too, that God's call for the undeveloped forces of Christian manhood and womanhood bespeaks the exalted purpose of real life, viz., to remove obstructions. The ignorant and the indolent may hinder by standing in the way of God's plans and purposes for the betterment of humanity. But the office of a true man is to use all his accumulated knowledge in making the pathway of life pleasant, peaceful and prosperous. Even as Jesus Himself sought to make it so for every man.

We may use our knowledge upon the undeveloped forces of nature and find profit therefrom; but when we have used our acquirements in benefiting the bodies and souls of our fellow beings, so that afterward they rise up and declare we helped them, we have achieved the most exalted of all services.

Three things will aid in going forward in spite of every difficulty. Stronger faith in the word of our Master. To live well is no easy task, but to attempt to live without the sincerest faith in the living Christ, within us and above us, is to curtail life of its powers and to draw the curtain of destiny. Another inspiration is more earnest conviction of personal duty. Christ speaks to us and asks our service in behalf of a world. Love for Christ and for humanity is another inspiration.

The poor, the neglected, the sore in heart, the helpless ought to find in us their truest friends, as we seek for opportunity to overcome in the difficult places of life. Such strong men and women God is continually calling into His service and blessing their obedience. Such, too, the world appreciates and honors. The greatest one who ever trod this earth declared of Himself, "I am among you as one that serveth." "I do always those things which please Him." When you and I have done what He would have us do we have emphasized the fact that the Christian life is only worth the living when it is lived well.

SERMONETTES.

He cannot reach heaven who gets out of touch with earth.

The trouble with many uplifters is that they are only onlookers.

Living men cannot long be satisfied with dead men's prayers.

The religion that cannot live in business has no business to live.

Being good is not much good unless your goodness makes good.

The true man will find the bread of life even in the strife for bread.

Nothing will help you into heaven like helping others out of their hells.

It's no use talking about having faith in God unless you keep faith with men.

Faith is something a good deal brighter and mightier than fear of the future.

They who have done least to prevent sin always want to do the most in punishing it.

Some men are sure they are humble because they can think only in diminutives.

Many a church that rails at bibulous indulgences is eager for mental anesthesia.

When the church acts as an umpire it usually waits until the cup has been stolen.

You may know how heaven regards money when you see the people who have it.

One of the most popular ways of dodging a duty is to write a book describing it.

The people who seem to have religion on the brain usually have no brains in their religion.

When your neighbors wish you were in heaven you may be sure you are not headed that way.

It takes more than a heaven-soaring steeple to overcome the self-adoring tendency of some churches.

You may think you sow your wild oats where none are looking, but you never reap them under those conditions.

The only hope some have of staying in their heaven is that no wind will arise sufficient to blow any chaff over the walls.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't try to understand a truth till you obey it.

Don't forget that crooks are made by dodging duties.

Don't try to make life joyous unless you yourself enjoy it.

Don't forget that obedience is the initial step for training for authority.

Don't forget that it is always safe to go where you can help another.

Don't be over-anxious to give advice, lest you yourself may need it most.

Don't mistake for generosity a longing to give to others what you have not.

Don't hesitate to fly to your brother's aid if you would escape the tempter.

Don't fail to notice the difference between trying to seem pleasant and seeking to give pleasure.

NOTED PERSONS TAKEN

Death Has a Recent Harvest of Four People of International Prominence.

EACH WAS GREAT IN HIS LINE

Modjeska, Crawford, Hitchcock and Swinburne Had Carved Their Names in Halls of Fame.

An actress, a statesman, a novelist and a poet, each standing in the foremost ranks of those in his particular line, have been called from the various scenes of their brilliant earthly careers within a short period recently. Each was known and admired internationally and their deaths, all within three days, deprive the world of further great works which it had every right to expect from such fruitful lives.

A Great Tragedienne.

The death of Helena Modjeska closes the career of one of the most remarkable women ever seen on an American stage. As a tragedienne none of her contemporaries was her superior, and but few if any her equal. Her life was a romantic one. She was first married to Gustav Modzejewski, by whom she had one son, Ralph. Her second marriage was with Count Bozenta in 1868. The count was exiled from Poland, in 1876, for his political writings and his wife was forbidden to appear on the Polish stage. The couple came to this country and were naturalized, the countess taking as her stage name a modified form of the name of her first husband. Her debut in this country was made in San Francisco in 1877.

In happy contradiction of the fate of many great artists she did not die poor. She earned during her stage career a million dollars, but gave to charity with an open hand. She founded an industrial school for girls in Cracow, Poland, and her generosity accounted for the disposal of the larger part of her earnings. She left an estate amounting to about $120,000.

In spite of the decree of exile pronounced against her husband, and despite the decree, issued after she had delivered an address at the World's Fair in Chicago on Russian-Polish politics, barring her from all Russian possessions, it is her husband's intention to take the body back to her native town of Cracow for burial.

An American Statesman.

The death of Ethan Allen Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior under Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt, removed a statesman whose record for honesty and whose high sense of duty were recognized by his country. Mr. Hitchcock was the grandson of General

ETHAN ALLEN HITCHCOCK.

Ethan Allen of the Revolution. His death came April 9 at the age of 74. In 1897 he was appointed by President McKinley as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Russia, and the following year the post was raised to an embassy. In 1898 he was called home to become Secretary of the Interior, a place which he kept under President Roosevelt. He served until March 4, 1907, when he resigned to return to private life.

Secretary Hitchcock was a foe to land frauds and the most prominent of his reforms was the determined effort to put an end to such frauds on the Federal domain. He prosecuted many wealthy land grabbers among whom were men well known in public life and private business.

A Famous Novelist.

The great American novelist, F. Marion Crawford, one of the most prolific our country has produced, breathed his last at his home at Sorrento, on the Bay of Naples, the evening of the same day as Mr. Hitchcock. Mr. Crawford had a training that gave him not only the secrets of language and literature, but an intimate knowledge of many peoples and of many lands. His father was Thomas Crawford, the noted sculptor whose "Liberty" is on top of the Capitol at Washington. His mother was a sister of Julia Ward Howe and of Sam Ward, the author. Young Crawford spent much of his life in Italy, where he was born, returning time and again after his wanderings over the earth, and there he finally married and made his home. He attended St. Paul's at Concord, N. H., and later entered Trinity College, Cambridge, still later going to Heidelberg. He made a deep study of many languages through his travels.

Though he spent most of his years after marriage in Italy, he made several visits to this country. His chief recreation was yachting and he held a professional master's certificate from the Association of American Ship Masters and from the United States Marine Board. He wrote an astounding number of novels, having produced one every year from the time he wrote the first in 1881, and sometimes three in twelve months. He wrote only one play, which was produced by Sarah Bernhardt in Paris.

English Man of Letters.

England's great poet and essayist, Algernon Charles Swinburne, died at the age of 72, at his home in Putney. One of the greatest poets of the Victorian period, all England expected Tennyson's mantle of poet laureate to fall upon his shoulders. But Swinburne was strong in his likes and dislikes and some of his works were tinged with his animosity against kings and priests. He created a style of his own and cared little for criticism. He was early inspired by Shakespeare and later became a devout worshiper of Browning. Upon leaving Oxford he spent some time in travel. He contributed a wealth of impassioned poetry to the English language and in addition was a keen critic. His strong personality has left an indelible mark upon literature.

A Burdened Man.

A certain small boy in grade number six was rapidly assuming manly ways. Not long ago, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, there was to be an entertainment at his school. Songs, recitations and a grab-bag were the principal features. The small boy waxed eloquent of the coming glories of this show, and more especially of the part he was to take.

On the morning of the entertainment his mother suggested that he should take his little sister, about four years old, with him. He hung his head.

"Don't you want to take her?" his mother asked.

"No, I don't," he answered.

"Why not?"

"'Cause there ain't none of the other fellers has to bring their children," was the reply.

Varying Impressions.

"The days are growing longer," said the man who keeps a lookout for the first robin.

"I don't notice any difference," said Sirius Barker; "they seem, as usual, to be getting longer if you count from one pay day to the next, and shorter if you figure the time between rent days."—Washington Star.

The indications are that under the new tariff law stockings will cost so much the old-fashioned industry of darning will be revived.

"Waiter, has this steak been cooked?" "Yes, sir; by electricity." "Well, take it back and give it another shock."

She—Is my hat on straight? He—Of course it is. She—Gracious! Then it isn't right. Why didn't you tell me?

Long—To what do you attribute your great business success? Strong—To my wife. She made it necessary for me to earn more money.

"Nearly all the trouble in the world comes through money," observed the moralizer. "Yes," rejoined the demoralizer, "yet people will borrow trouble."

"Would you like some fresh air?" she asked, starting in the direction of the window. "Yes; do you know any?" he replied, thinking she was going to the piano.

"Did Miss Flavilla seem pleased when you asked her to go to the theater?" "Pleased! She wanted to keep the tickets for fear something might happen to me."—Chicago Record.

"And have you heard the latest?" "No. What is it?" "Why, in Ireland they can't hang a man with a wooden leg." "Never! What do they do, then?" "Why, they just hang him with a rope."

She—Economizing, are they? You surprise me! I understood they were simply rolling in wealth. He—Well, that may be true, but I believe they have to be careful not to roll too far.—St. Louis Times.

"And you wouldn't begin a journey on Friday?" "You bet I wouldn't." "I can't understand how you can have any faith in such a silly superstition." "No superstition about it—Saturday's pay day."—Chicago Journal.

"I understand you have invented an air ship that won't tip over." "That is my belief," replied the cautious inventor. "At least it won't tip over while on the ground, and it hasn't been anywhere else yet." — Philadelphia Ledger.

Lady—What do you want, my little man? Little Boy (carrying a cat)—I want that dollar you offered as a reward for the return of your canary bird. Lady—That's not a canary; it's a cat. Little Boy—I know it; but the bird's inside."

Vicar's Wife—No, the vicar is not in just now. Is there any message you would like me to give him when he returns? Old Women, cheerfully—Please, mum, Martha Higgins would like to be buried at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.—Punch.

House Owner—You failed to pay your rent last month. What are you going to do about it? Tenant—Oh, I suppose I'll do as you said when I rented it. House Owner—What did I say? Tenant—You said I must pay in advance or not at all.

"Hallon, old chap, where are you off to?" said one man to another. "I'm going over to the postoffice to make complaint about the dilatory delivery." "What's the trouble?" "Why, that check you promised to send me ten days ago hasn't reached me yet."—Tit-Bits.

The following extract from a letter of thanks is cherished by its recipient: "The beautiful clock you sent us came in perfect condition, and is now in the parlor on top of the bookshelves, where we hope to see you soon, and your husband, also, if he can make it convenient."

"You waste too much paper," said the editor. "But how can I economize?" asked the writer. "By writing on both sides of the paper." "But you will not accept articles when they are written on both sides of the sheet." "I know it; but you'd save paper just the same."—Yonkers Statesman.

"When we take charge of the government," says the wise old suffragette, "we will make some changes in the naval bureau." "I should hope so!" agrees the enthusiastic young suffragette. "Why, bureaus are hopelessly out of style! We will have a combination wardrobe and chiffonier."

Spread of the Idea.

"Are there any game laws in this part of the country?" asked the stranger with the shotgun.

"Yes, sir," said the grizzled son of toil who was sitting on top of the rail fence; "but they ain't enforced. Public sentiment is agin 'em in these diggins. You kin shoot all you want to, mister."—Chicago Tribune.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. What Is a Billion?

Great Britain clings to its own numerical system and regards a billion as a million times a million. But America differs, a billion in the United States being only a thousand million. This is perhaps the only instance in which a thing is bigger in the old country than in the new. One has to go only a little way from England—to Calais—to find the billion lessened; for France dignifies a thousand million with the name of billion. They are wasting a word in France in this connection, however, inasmuch as there is already a word milliard, to designate this number.

TYPHOID FEVER.

Its Origin Can Be Traced to Vegetables.

Inasmuch as the claim is at times made that typhoid fever is communicated through the agency of vegetables grown in a soil infected with typhoid bacilli through drainage or otherwise, it is of interest to study a recent European investigation by Dr. Claudiz dealing with this subject. He found that when fresh typhoid bacilli were placed in the earth they were not particularly adaptive to new conditions, and did not flourish, but if they were associated with other bacteria which were native to the soil they were more hardy, and could be propagated in the form of cultures which will endure in the ground for several months. Using some bacteria developed in this way, a thorough test of the susceptibility of vegetables for harboring these microorganisms was made. First there were planted in soil thus infected peas, radishes, cress and other vegetables, which were allowed to grow until several inches in height. They were then cut off level to the ground, and after being washed with sterilized water they were bruised in bouillion, a substance which is particularly favorable for the development of bacteria. The results showed that in only one of the four experiments could any typhoid bacilli be detected. It was then determined to ascertain whether the bacteria penetrated to the interior of the plants, and for this purpose their surface was first washed with a solution of bi-chloride of mercury, which would have the effect of killing any germs with which it came in contact, but at the same time would not necessarily penetrate to the interior and act on any microorganisms in the inner tissues of the plant. The plants were then tested as before, with negative results, and the conclusion was reached that even in the event of bacteria being present on the roots or leaves they were not able to reach the interior structures.—Harper's Weekly.

NOT DRUGS

Food Did It.

After using laxative and cathartic medicines from childhood a case of chronic and apparently incurable constipation yielded to the scientific food, Grape-Nuts, in a few days.

"From early childhood I suffered with such terrible constipation that I had to use laxatives continuously going from one drug to another and suffering more or less all the time.

"A prominent physician whom I consulted told me the muscles of the digestive organs were partially paralyzed and could not perform their work without help of some kind, so I have tried at different times about every laxative and cathartic known, but found no help that was at all permanent. I had finally become discouraged and had given my case up as hopeless when I began to use the pre-digested food, Grape-Nuts.

"Although I had not expected this food to help my trouble, to my great surprise Grape-Nuts digested immediately from the first and in a few days I was convinced that this was just what my system needed.

"The bowels performed their functions regularly and I am now completely and permanently cured of this awful trouble.

"Truly the power of scientific food must be unlimited." "There's a Reason."

John W. White, former country treasurer, of Clay City, has invented a device on which a patent will soon be issued, for the delivery of rural mail. The purpose of the invention is that of conveying the mail to and from residences at a distance from the route, doing away with the necessity for walking back and fourth to the stationary boxes along the line. The carrier, on coming to a station by the roadside, puts the mail for a patron who lives a quarter or even a half mile away into a small receptacle, or box, for the purpose and shoots it over a strand of wires which has been adjusted between points; this signals its arrival at the residence, it is emptied and matter to be mailed is deposited into it, when it is about back to the carrier, making the round at the rate of a mile a minute. By a very simple manipulation the impetus is given it at either end to carry the special box over the line. The inventor says that it can be adjusted so as to make delivery a mile from the rural route.

John Scarf, who lives six miles east of Silver Lake, was thrown from a road grader which he was operating, and both legs were broken. He also received internal injuries that may cause death.

The beautiful country home of Mrs. George Wilson, three miles west of Geneva, was destroyed by fire which originated from a chicken breeder. Mrs. Wilson had a narrow escape from death or severe injuries in the flames.

Grief over the death of her son a few days ago caused the demise of Mrs. Josephine Metzger, aged 73, of Evansville.

Ernest Sanders, fourteen years old, was accidentally shot and fatally injured at Vincenness by his older brother, Ambers Sanders, while preparing to go hunting. His left ear and the left side of his face were torn away.

The 150 newsboys of Fort Wayne are getting into the "city beautiful" campaign and they have decided to pick up all pieces of waste paper they find on the streets. The advent of the youngsters into the field is an evidence of the general interest being taken to make the city cleaner.

Incorporation papers have been filed and approved for a big land company, whose principal offices will be in Crawfordsville, the object of the new company being the buying, selling and colonizing of Texas lands. The company is incorporated for $60,000. The incorporators are John M. Glover and Charles W. Hymer, of Crawfordsville, and Claude B. Harris, of Houston, Texas.

Dean Manlove, the four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Manlove, of Milton, had a singular experience a few days ago. He complained of being sick, and in his efforts to free his stomach of some load, ejected a small tin lid. The lid had belonged to a box of adhesive plaster, as was shown by the lettering. It is a size larger than a quarter. It had evidently laid in his stomach some time, from all appearances.

Eight well known grocers, butchers and milk dealers of South Bend and Mishawaka were notified that they are under charges of violating the pure food laws. The affidavits were sworn to by Frank W. Tucker, state food inspector, of Indianapolis, who has been in South Bend for the last three weeks making investigations. The affidavits were made out by Prosecuting Attorney Pattee on information given by Tucker.

John Robinson, of New Albany, has more than fifty bird shot in his left arm, leg and side. His wounds are serious, but it is thought he will recover. While seated on the river bank fishing and partly concealed by underbrush he was mistaken for a duck by men who were passing in a motor boat and was fired on. His scream of pain attracted their attention and they drew to the shore and assisted him to his home.

E. M. Carr, superintendent of the Light, Heat and Power company, of Newcastle, narrowly escaped death when a light automobile truck which he was driving was struck by a freight train and smashed. Carr was crossing the tracks at Thornburg street. Carr saw the L. E. & W. freight train leaving the crossing, but failed to see a cut of cars which had been pushed on a siding. He saw them in time to jump and thus saved his life.

To save her two small children from starvation, Mrs. John Kekich, a Polish woman of Gary, took an expensive Panama hat to the police station to be raffled or sold to purchase milk for her babies. An exciting raffle took place later at the station, and $15 was raised for the needy woman. Mrs. Kekich is a widow, her husband before he died being the owner of a saloon. In her prosperous days she purchased the hat for her son, who is attending college in Spokane, Wash.

Earl, five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Williams, of Muncie, narrowly escaped death in an attack by a vicious bulldog. But for the courageous efforts of a man who was near and who literally choked the animal to death, the boy probably would have been killed, as the animal had fastened its teeth in the cheek and lips of the lad and would not let go. The boy will always be scarred as a result of the attack, but he will recover. It was feared that the dog was mad, but this is now regarded improbable.

The proverbial cat with nine lives has been forced to take a back seat. A black bulldog belonging to the Home Storage company at Elwood, was shot through the head a few days ago by a policeman and three other balls were lodged in its body. It still showed signs of life, and the officer beat it over the head with his mace until at appeared that its skull was crushed to a jelly. Despite this treatment it got up and staggered off down the street while the patrolman was reloading his revolver. When pursued it took refuge under a large building and could not be dislodged. Two days later it appeared at the Home storage barns and was cared for by the hostlers, and was later sent to a farm in the country, where it will be allowed to live out its remaining days unmolested. The strange part of the affair is that the animal shows no ill results from the bullet that must have passed through its brain, or the fracture of its skull.

While returning from a visit with friends, Mrs. Frank Riley, of near Young's creek, six miles south of Paoli, died suddenly of heart failure while riding in a buggy with her husband.

Mrs. Jesse Osborne, aged 30, of Peru, placed a pitsol in her mouth and fired a bullet into her brain because the husband to whom she was married but ten days, threatened to leave her. She had been married three times.

Pedigree of the Shirt.

Why does the being we call a gentleman wear around his neck a band of spotless whiteness and unbearable stiffness, at his wrists similar instruments of torture, and before his chest a rigidly starched linen plate? asks the Atlantic Monthly. No one outside of a madhouse would call these articles of apparel agreeable. There is for the custom no reason at all known from comfort, hygiene, or usefulness. There is, however, the ghost of a dead reason. Once upon a time a "gentleman" was presumed to do no work, and he dressed to show this, by putting on these visible signs that he never soiled his hands, sweated his neck, or bent his noble back. It matters not that we no longer believe in this definition of a gentleman; we did believe it once; its ghost rules on. No man is bold enough to appear in society without this impossible harness. Only a professional humorist, like Mark Twain, or some one who wishes to pose as a mild lunatic, dares rebel. Addison said that the man who would clothe himself according to common sense would find himself in jail within a week.

EARNEST ADVICE.

Rev. F. C. Pettypool Speaks for the Benefit of the Sick.

Any person suffering with backache, urinary disorders or other signs of kidney complaint may feel the utmost confidence in the following statement made by Rev. F. C. Pettypool, Baptist clergyman, of Herrin, Ill.:

"A weak back and disordered condition of the kidneys annoyed me for some years up to last fall. I often had to stop work and press my hands to my back. My limbs ached constantly and at night I could not sleep. The kidney secretions also passed too frequently. I got a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me quickly and permanently. Further use brought a perfect cure."

Had Never Seen White Men.

In the Mornington Island, one of the Wellesley group in the Gulf of Carpentaria, R. B. Howard, chief protector of aborigines in Queensland, has found a tribe which it is believed has never before come in contact with white men.

After searching vainly for two days, Mr. Howard came upon a few natives, and afterward a considerable number were seen. The blacks, he says, were in their primitive state. They did not know the use of tobacco, and would not eat bread, meat or even sugar, although they readily tasted anything given to them. There was no sign whatever of any disease, and, although emaciated in appearance, they were strong and agile.

The Embarrassing Truth.

"The vindication of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley is a great triumph," said a Washington diplomat, "for pure food. Dr. Wiley tells the truth, and the truth is painful to certain types of food producers."

The diplomat laughed.

"Dr. Wiley was talking the other day about the painfulness of the truth," he resumed. "He said it reminded him of a morning call that he once made on a young lady in his youth. In answer to his ring a tiny tot of a girl opened the door, and Dr. Wiley said to her, as he walked into the hall:

"'Where is your auntie, Mabel?'

"'Upstairs in her nightie,' chirped the tot, 'a-lookin' over the balustrade.'"

The Secret Out.

"What made my lovely complexion? I do not like to tell, for it was medicine, but the nicest a woman ever took. It was Lane's Family Medicine that did it." This is a pleasant herb tea which acts favorably on the stomach and bowels, purifying the blood and cleansing the skin like magic. It cures headache and backache. Druggists and dealers sell it, 25c.

Entirely Trustworthy.

"Maria, I'm going to have Dr. Squillips treat me for my heart trouble."

"What do you know about Dr. Squillips, John?"

"All I know about him is that Mr. Gotsum recommends him to me."

"Who is Mr. Gotsum?"

"Mr. Gotsum is one of the stockholders of the life insurance company that is carrying a $20,000 risk on my life."—Chicago Tribune.

Those who keep Hamlins Wizard Oil in the house do not have to buy any other remedy for sore throat. No other remedy will cure this trouble so quickly or so surely. Remember this.

The Professor Demurs.

"Don't quote Slobson to me," protested the doctor. "I know Slobson, and he's a regular freak."

"My friend," gravely chid the professor, "you should be more careful in your use of the English language. Anything that is regular can't be a freak, and anything that is a freak can't be regular."

Not the Doctor's Fault.

Dr. Fell at last explained why the poet did not like him.

"He knew well enough why he didn't," said the doctor, "and he could have told the reason if he had felt like it. It was because I had sued him for a doctor bill. That was the only way I could collect it. By ginger, I made him pay it, too, with the interest!"

It is with no other purpose than to do justice to the memory of a much maligned man, even at this late date, that the explanation herein set forth is given to the public.

Standing Up for Him.

"Miriam, isn't that young Fergus coming to our house pretty often now?"

"I suppose he is, mamma."

"Do you know anything about him? What is he worth, for instance?"

"Well, he's worth any dozen of the ordinary young men of my acquaintance."

"Yes, but——"

"And he's worth $100 a week to the firm he works for—even if he does get only $25 now."—Chicago Tribune.

A Communication.

Editor of St. Joe News.

Dear Sir: I wish to say to your people that the DeKalb Co., Board of Health has for several years worked faithfully to systematize and bring a complete and regular report of all births, deaths, contagious and infectious diseases occuring in DeKalb Co. To accomplish this we need the assistance of everyone. This we are receiving from every part of the county excepting the southeast part. From that part there seems to be a neglect of duty in this particular work. I write this in hopes to call the attention of those heretofore neglectful in order that it may be stimulative to their full duty without further demands.

Physicians and undertakers are especially urged to be more prompt. Burial of any human body over 7 months without a permit from some health officer is a violation with a severe penalty attached and then a neglect to promptly make proper returns of burial is another.

Any neglect on the part of parent or physician to promptly report all births, deaths or contagious diseases, is subject to severe penalty.

The famous Hart's Boy Band gave a concert in Widney's opera house, last Friday evening to a good sized crowd. On their way here they stopped at Spencerville and gave a concert. About five o'clock an open air concert was given on the street. The evening entertainment consisted of band and orchestra music, solos, quartets and choruses. The music was all first class and was rendered in excellent style showing that the instructor had complete control of his boys and that they were all genuine musicians. Everyone present said that it was the best they ever heard and only wished that more of our people had turned out to hear them.

A FEW THINGS AND HAPPENINGS BETWEEN ST. JOE, IND., AND SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

Departing at noon, Monday, April 5, via Wabash R. R. Co., I left at home my dear parents, sister and one brother, all wishing me abundant success and a joyous trip, a few instances of which I, in this paragraph, will attempt to tell about

It is unnecessary for any mention to be made of the first part of the trip, except that I met Brother Arthur at Spencerville, Ind., and arrived and spent the afternoon in Fort Wayne, bidding a few of our special friends farewell, and retiring early so as to be in the best condition for the beginning of what is to me certainly an education worth having.

Leaving Fort Wayne Tuesday morning during an awful downpour of rain and the same continued a part of the forenoon, not dwelling on anything in particular, but going through the state of Illinois. That statecertainly is a garden for a farmer, being so level and so free from trees that one can see for many miles, just look and look until objects fade away in the distance. Arriving in St. Louis at 2:20 p. m. Tuesday, we left our luggage at a parcel stand and determined to go up town and look for the residence of Mr. Adam Hummel, which we were told was at 2306 Sullivan Ave., but there was a mistake, and consequently we did not find the house but nevertheless we were about 38 squares from the union depot and about 6 squares from a car line, when all at once as unwelcomed as the suddenness of the affair, the rain and hail began to pour down in torrents as a portion of the great Niagara Falls, and the best we could do was to go for the car line, but before we got a car our overcoats were wet through and through, but we managed to get to the depot, and upon entering were as two ducks coming out of a pond onto some dry sand. The water was just dripping or even streaming out of our clothing, but we finally got dried out and the storm somewhat subsided and we again went out for a walk, thinking that hardly could the storm disappoint us twice in one day, and the evening was clear and very beautiful, but rather cool on account of the storm. On leaving the depot and of what I had already observed in the afternoon, I set my head that St. Louis was a very dirty and disagreeable place for one to think of making it his or her home. Really I am compelled to speak one thing in favor of St. Louis, in regard to their union depot.

I will name a few facts concerning it:

1—It contains 32 tracks, side by side.
2—It cost $7,000,000.00.
3—One window contains 5,000 pieces of glass.
4—There are 27 ticket agents on one eight-hour shift.
5—185 trains leave daily.
6—240 lights on the main chandelier.
7—Its tower is 285 feet high.
8—Its length is 820 feet.
9—Its width is 606 feet.
10—It is the largest in the world.

We left St. Louis at night, and of course can not say much about this part of the trip, but as soon as there was light enough to see we were up and looking, and nothing appeared of importance except that the railroad runs alongside the Missouri river, making a beautiful scene for lovers of water. Arrived in Kansas City at 7:00, we had until 10:05 the same morning to look around and we certainly did. We took a car and went clear to the end of the line south through the finest residence district of that city; returning went to the post office and wrote a few cards, then to the depot and left on the U. P. R. R. at 10:05 a. m.

We did not get into Kansas City, Kan., at all. The railroad winds around in such manner along the river, and we only got a small sight of the great stock yards there. The country for about 100 miles west of Kansas City is very rough and broken, a few large hills of limestone which they are making into cement and the valleys are very productive. We are now a little farther west on the "Plains of Kansas," and again there is nothing to obscure your vision except the great distance one can see. Again it is night and we awake the next morning to find around us about six inches of snow and rather cool. We are just east of Denver, about one hour's run, and at one open place in the hills we had a vision of Pike's Peak at a distance we were told of not less than 110 miles. There was nothing in Denver really, and we only staid there about one hour and a half between trains. It was so cold there and so disagreeable that it did not suit either of us.

Leaving Denver on the D. & R. G. railroad, one goes south, passes Palmer Lake, which is the continental divide, there are four rivers which find a source in this lake, going out in four different directions. Second he passes what is known as Elephant Rock, it being of limestone and weathered into the shape of the head and trunk of an elephant. Third was Pike's Peak, which you pass by at a distance of fourteen miles and have a fine view of the scenic railway on its slopes, but one would say that instead of fourteen miles away it was no more than one, so you can see

In 1908 the expenditures of the United States government on account of the navy amounted to $118,720,347, and the expenditures on account of the army $110,284,864. Since the beginning of the government in 1789 to 1908 the army cost $6,364,523,637, and the navy cost $2,327,207,151.

Martin Tustison found an early date of the St. Joe News while looking over his old papers Tuesday, it being dated Saturday, November 21, 1885. It is amusing to look over it and note the vast changes between now and then. The size of it is 7x10 inches and was issued every two weeks in interest of Case and Olds.

A plan has been proposed to sell the stock in the Muncie Brewing company to 2,000 or more persons and to keep the plant going by supplying the home and family trade of stockholders in that manner. A share of stock, according to the plan, would cost a dollar and this would entitle the owner to be a customer of the company, as he would be in the position of selling liquor to himself. This plan is said to have been worked successfully elsewhere under similar conditions. Otherwise the company, which is now in the hands of a receiver, must go to the wall.

Mrs. Emma Woodcox of Garrett, is visiting with relatives here a few days. Cadmir was also here Wednesday.

Mr. Wm. Miller of Montpelier, Ind., is the guest of Iona Woodcox and wife, this week. Mr. Morr is also visiting there.

Saturday afternoon the B. & O. paymaster replenished the funds of Garrett employes to the extent of $75,000, the amount of the April pay roll.

Mrs. C. B. Leighty will return from the Lutheran hospital at Ft. Wayne, where she underwent an operation on her nose, a week ago Tuesday. She is improving nicely and is feeling fine.

Dealers in strawberries had better be on their guard from now on, for the state board of health proposes to enforce the rule it made some time ago that all fruits exposed for sale must be covered and kept from the air and the outside dust and dirt. Now that the strawberry season is at hand, Barnard, whose duty it is to enforce the pure food laws, says that the inspectors of the department will at once begin a campaign against dealers who violate the law and the rules of the board in regard to the proper care of strawberries. He says the inspectors are already at work in Indianapolis and that they will prosecute every dealer who leaves his berries uncovered. They will first tackle the larger cities of the state, and then the smaller ones.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Explosion Kills Twenty Men.

At least twenty men were killed by a premature blast of dynamite in a stone quarry operated by the Callahan Road Improvement company near South Bethlehem, eleven miles southwest of Albany, N. Y. Among the dead are John Hoyt Callahan, vice president and general manager of the company; Charles D. Callahan, a brother, and LeRoy McMillan, assistant superintendent. One thousand pounds of dynamite exploded and the bodies of the victims were hurled hundreds of feet and so badly mutilated as to be almost beyond recognition. As darkness was falling a wagon drew up to the engine house loaded with bodies that had been picked up back of the quarry. The Callahan Road Improvement company furnished crushed stone for road building. The preparations for a blast had been going on for six weeks. Thirteen holes, seventy-five feet deep, had been drilled at points about twenty feet back of the face of the big quarry and the explosion of the dynamite with which they were to be loaded was expected to displace forty thousand tons of rock. Over eight thousand pounds of dynamite were to be have been used. The workmen had placed 500-pound charges in six of the holes and were working on the seventh when a percussion cap was prematurely discharged. A terrific explosion followed which hurled tons of rock into the air and scattered the bodies of the victims in all directions.

Roosevelt Bags Big Rhinoceros.

A bulky rhinoceros is the latest prize wrested from the jungle by Colonel Roosevelt. From the ex-president's camp near Machakos, Africa, word was sent that the luck of the Roosevelt party continues and that fifteen varieties of game, including the big rhino, have been bagged in the last expedition. The big rhino was charging Mr. Roosevelt when the hunter fired. The distance was fourteen paces and the animal fell dead. The naturalists of the party are kept busy preparing the trophies which Mr. Roosevelt and his son Kermit are bringing in daily. Forty-five skins already have been prepared for the Smithsonian instiution at Washington.

Four Bodies Blown to Bits.

The mixing room of the Laflin-Rand powder mills at Turk tsation, near Columbus, Kas., blew up, instantly killing four men. Twenty workmen were injured, some seriously. The men were at work in the mixing room at the time of the explosion. Their bodies were blown into bits. Immediately after the explosion the factory took fire, but the blaze was finally extinguished. The loss will reach $75,000.

Three Killed in M., K. & T. Wreck.

Three persons were killed, twenty-two injured and one badly scalded in a wreck of a Missouri, Kansas & Texas passenger train near Bonita, Tex. The train was running at a high speed when the engine left the track. All of the coaches except the rear one were ditched. The wreck occurred at a point where a freight train was wrecked recently.

Rockefeller Will Build New Church.

The Fifth Avenue Baptist church, in New York City, commonly referred to as John D. Rockefeller's church, will be razed and a new $500,000 structure erected on the site, according to a decision reached at a recent meeting in the vestry. The movement was first launched by a motion put by Mr. Rockefeller at a corporate meeting last December.

Returning Battle Flag.

Nine veterans of the civil war, two of them official representatives of the state of Ohio, have left for Selma, Ala., to return with proper ceremonies the confederate flags captured by the Fourth Ohio cavalry on the battlefield near that town. The flags belonged to the rifle scouts, which were a part of General Forest's command.

Beginning July 1 all interurban roads in Indiana will carry baggage on the same basis as steam roads. This decision was made at a meeting of interurban railroad officials held recently in Indianapolis.

LIFE TERM TO BOYLE; WIFE GETS 25 YEARS

Woman Also Is Fined $5,000 and Costs in the "Billy" Whitla Kidnaping Case.

BOTH PRISONERS COLLAPSE.

Husband and Spouse Are Carried Most of Way Back to Cells—She Weeps Violently in Jail.

In Mercer, Pa., Judge Williams on Monday sentenced James H. Boyle, convicted of kidnaping "Billy" Whitla, to imprisonment for life in the western penitentiary at Pittsburg. Mrs. Boyle, indicted as Mary Doe, was sentenced to twenty-five years in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $5,000 and costs of the prosecution. Boyle did not cause the scene in court which he had threatened and did not utter a word before being sentenced. His counsel, however, pleaded for leniency for both Boyle and his wife. The lawyer said that until a recent period the extreme penalty for kidnaping in this State was ten years and in view of the fact that the boy had been treated with every consideration and that all care had been taken not to inflict unnecessary mental anguish upon the parents he felt leniency might be asked with propriety. After Attorney Miller of counsel for the Boyles had completed his plea for leniency in behalf of his clients Judge Williams told Boyle to stand up and asked him if he had anything to say as to why sentence should not be pronounced upon him. Boyle merely said, "I have not," and shook his head. Judge Williams then addressed the prisoner and told him of the seriousness of the crime of which he had been convicted. Both Boyle and his wife collapsed on hearing their sentences pronounced. Mrs. Boyle wept violently when returned to her cell.

TWENTY DROWN IN OHIO RIVER.

Gasoline Launch, Heavily Loaded with Steelworkers, Sinks.

Twenty persons were drowned when a gasoline launch sank in the middle of the Ohio River near Schoenville, four miles below Pittsburg, Tuesday night. Of the thirty occupants of the boat only ten escaped. All the men were employes of the Pressed Steel Car Company at the McKees Rocks plant. The men had been working overtime until 8 o'clock and left the works to cross the river in the launch fifteen minutes later. The boat is said to have been intended for not more than twenty persons, and it was understood it was dangerous to attempt to carry as many as twenty-five in it. But all the men wanted to get across the river on the first trip of the boat, and thirty of them crowded in. There was no explosion, no leak was sprung, but the boat simply sank beneath the weight it had been bearing and went to the bottom. As it sank, it caused a suction which took many of the men down with it. Others attempted to swim ashore, but were chilled by the cold water and became exhausted before reaching the shore.

REPORT SHIP LOST WITH 21.

Shores, Six Days Overdue, Believed Sunk in Lake Superior.

Advices received at Duluth are to the effect that the steamer Shores, six days' overdue at Duluth, went down off White Fish Point in Lake Superior with all on board. The crew and passengers numbered twenty-one.

News of the destruction of the Shores was brought to Duluth by the crew of the steamer Northland, who say that as the latter was passing that point on the way up they discovered wreckage strewn all over the lake, and, in their opinion, it belonged to the Shores. The fact that she was a week overdue at Duluth and no word of her has been received adds color to the theory.

The Adella Shores belonged to the S. O. Neff Transportation Company of Milwaukee, and is said to have been up bound from Michigan with a load of salt. The ship was of 4,250 tons burden and under command of Captain S. Holmes. The engineer was R. S. Nott. The names of the crew and passengers are not obtainable.

CHURCHMAN IN THIEF'S CELL.

Charles H. Moyer, Prominent in Church, Confesses Embezzlement.

Charles H. Moyer, "local preacher" in Woodlawn Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago, president of the Cook County Bible Class Athletic Association, Sunday school superintendent, secretary and treasurer of the Epworth League, occupied a cell at the Harrison street police station the other night, a self-confessed embezzler of $1,700, on complaint of officials of the Clarkson Glue Company, which employed him as bookkeeper and general accountant. Moyer, who is 48 years of age and has a wife, a son, and a daughter, at first denied that he had cashed checks belonging to the company for his own use. Then he admitted taking $400, and by degrees was led to confess that the amounts taken during the last two years footed up to $1,700, "including interest."

THE CONVICTED KIDNAPERS OF WILLIE WHITLA.

SWORD GIRT ON SULTAN.

Ceremony Making Him Ruler Ends with Plowing Furrow.

Mehmed V. ended his "coronation day" in Constantinople Monday, by plowing a furrow in the lawn at Dolma Bagtsche Palace, symbolically at least, by holding the plow handles for the fraction of a minute while two horses dragged the plow a few yarrds. In carrying out the ancient test Mehmed V. showing himself to be sound of body and fit to bear the physical burdens of the empire.

It had been a day both of fulfillment of ancient customs and of the breaking of them. Christians for the first time were admitted to the small mosque attached to Ayoub Mosque and allowed to see the ceremony of girding the sword of Osman upon the sultan. Among thirty persons present were Buckman Pasha, an American, and Woods Pasha, an Englishman, both of whom are in the Turkish service. They were impressed with the beauty and the solemnity of the ceremony, which, with the chants of the priests, lasted only twenty minutes.

The Burlington Railway has decided to make a 2½-cent passenger rate, effective in Missouri, and this action is expected to end the proceeding to nullify the 2-cent law.

All the coal carrying roads are rushing large quantities of coal to the tidewater, and to Western points, and every railroad crew is busy, while miners are being worked full capacity.

Plans for the construction of the Great Northern Railroad line from Noyes, Minn., to Winnipeg, have been filed with the Manitoba government. The line is to be in operation by Sept. 1.

Since the completion of its line to the head of the lakes, the Wisconsin Central has advanced the rate on soft coal between Manitowoc, Wis., and the Twin Cities from 90 cents to $1.15 per ton.

The stockholders of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company have voted to issue $100,000,000 of new stock which will be offered at $100 per share in exchange for the company's bonds at $130.

About thirty iron ore carrying contracts between the Cuyuna Range Railway Company and fee owners and lease holders on the Cuyuna range have been filed for record at Brainerd. The rate is 65 to 66 cents a ton.

The Missouri representatives have passed a prohibitition law for passenger trains, making it unlawful to drink or expose intoxicating liquors on passenger trains in that State, or to ride on a passenger train in an intoxicated condition

WILL DISCIPLINE BY RECORD.

"Q" Road Putting Into Effect New Method of Handling Employes.

"Discipline by record" is the title of a new method of maintaining discipline among the employes of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, which the officials are confident will achieve satisfactory results. Instead of punishing an employe for infractions of rules by suspending him from ten to sixty days, the Burlington will govern its workers by a system of records.

Any employe whose record indicates clearly that he is not a safe or fit man to be intrusted with the lives of passengers or with valuable property will be dismissed. Promotion will be based on the service record. When the qualities are equal between two men, the older in the service will receive the preference. Officials of the road believe that suspension does not make a man any better, while it deprives him of the chance to earn money to support his family.

AMERICAN SCHOOL RAZED.

Property at Kessab Burned in the Anti-Christian Riots.

An investigator who has returned from a trip to Kessab, Asiatic Turkey, reports that all the American property at that place has been destroyed by the Moslem raiders. The property consisted of a girls' high school under the direction of Miss Effie N. Chambers, a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Three-fourths of the native houses also have been destroyed, but the Armenian church and the new Protestant school building are standing. Nearly all the people who fled from Kessab have returned to find their houses looted and they are destitute. Some food and clothing are being distributed, but there is no system in the work and the supplies are inadequate.

HITS CHURCH AGREEMENT.

Judge Says Raising of Children in Given Faith Cannot Be Enforced.

Stipulations before marriage by which one or the other party agrees to permit the education and religious training of children in a given faith cannot be enforced by law. Judge Matthew G. Reynolds of St. Louis the other day handed down a decision to this effect. This decision, said by attorneys to be the first of its kind, holds to be of no effect one of the requirements of the Catholic Church, that non-Catholics who marry Catholics sign an ante-nuptial contract giving control of the religious education of children born to them to the Catholic party to the agreement.

Omaha Agency Volunteers to Trail Neglectful Husbands.

A unique collection agency, with the sole purpose of collecting alimony for divorcees whose former husbands have failed to live up to the obligations imposed on them by the court, has been started in Omaha, and, according to the men in charge, has already an extensive clientele. It makes no difference whether the husband was neglectful in paying the sum in bulk or in monthly installments—the firm undertakes the collection of both. The agency will be run by men who have had experience in the collection of ordinary debts and they anticipate no trouble

CAPTAIN PETER HAINS IS FOUND TO BE GUILTY

Manslaughter in the First Degree Is the Verdict for Killing of Annis.

PENALTY IS 1 TO 20 YEARS

Appeal Will Be Made on Ground That Jury Was Not Guarded Properly During Trial.

Capt. Peter C. Hains, Jr., U. S. A., faces a prison term of from one to twenty years. Despite all the testimony submitted by the defense as tending to show insanity, he was convicted in Flushing, N. Y., Tuesday of manslaughter in the first degree for killing William E. Annis at the Bayside Yacht Club last August. Quickly following the young army officer's conviction, his counsel announced that they would produce affidavits to show that the jury had not been properly guarded during the trial and upon this allegation will urge that a new trial be granted.

After the jury was discharged Juror William Craft said four ballots were taken. On the first three ballots six voted for murder in the first degree and six for acquittal on the ground of insanity. On the fourth ballot the compromise of manslaughter in the first degree was reached.

William E. Annis was shot and killed last August by Capt. Peter C. Hains, Jr., at the Bayside Yacht Club on Long Island. Capt. Hains was accompanied by his brother, T. Jenkins Hains, who was tried for participating in the crime, but was acquitted. Capt. Hains, it was said, had received letters from his wife, Mrs. Claudia Hains, showing relations with Annis which enraged him. It was asserted that Mrs. Hains had made a confession in which she told of her friendship for Annis. Capt. Hains shot Annis as the victim was returning from a yachting trip.

After the arrest of the brother Capt Hains began to develop signs of mental unrest, and during the trial his counsel and alienists who testified for him endeavored to convince the jury that the army officer was a victim of "impulsive insanity."

BALLOON EXPLODES IN FLIGHT

Army Craft Destroyed and Two Officers Bruised at Jackson, Neb.

Army balloon No. 12 exploded in landing at Jackson, Neb., Monday night after a 120-mile trip and was destroyed, Captain Chandler and Lieutenant Ware, the aeronauts in charge being knocked down and bruised, but escaping serious injury. Captain Chandler believes that while at a high altitude the gas bag became charged with static electricity, and that on reaching the ground contact with the earth caused an arc to form, thus producing an electric spark, which set fire to the big bag. The ascension was made from Fort Omaha. The balloon started north as soon as it was well into the air and soon crossed the Missouri River. It followed the general course of the river for nearly 100 miles, the flight following a northwesterly direction The 120-mile flight was made in about six hours, deducting the hour and a half the balloon was becalmed.

MISUSE OF $500,000 IS CHARGED.

Washington Police Claim to Have Proof of J. C. Davis' Swindling.

More than half a million dollars is claimed by the police to have been illegally disposed of by John C. Davis a lawyer, who is under arrest in Washington, charged with embezzlement and conspiracy. Davis' alleged victims are mostly aged women. The police say they have documentary evidence to the effect that the prisoner obtained large sums of money, not only from Washington women, but from residents of Alexandria, Va., Cincinnati, New York and other cities. Martin D Davis, brother of the accused, who also is under arrest, charged with conspiracy, and who is said to be secretary of the Potomac Building and Loan Association, says his brother can account for every penny.

Suffrage Killed in Missouri.

The Missouri Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments killed the woman's suffrage resolution by reporting it adversely.

Work of Congress

Little progress was made in the consideration of the tariff bill in the Senate Thursday, the lead schedule being under discussion. Senator Penrose made a strong fight against increases in the rates of the schedule above the duties provided in the House on the ground that such increases would unnecessarily increase the cost of paint, which the farmers use extensively. During the discussion Senators Beveridge and Gallinger engaged in a sharp colloquy during which Mr. Gallinger accused the Indiana Senator of "advertising his own wares." Earlier in the day Senator Culberson addressed the Senate in favor of low duties, especially in the iron and steel schedules. He declared that the people would take matters in their own hands if the law did not check monopolies, and said that in that event lamp posts would be found. Representative Murphy of Missouri held the attention of the House with a recitation of the charges against Judges Phipps and Mepherson of the western district of his State, which he had made in his original resolution. His colleague Mr. Rucker, corroborated all that he said in denunciation of the action of the two judges.

Just before adjournment Friday the Senate voted to fix the duty on lead contained in lead ore at 1½ cents a pound, which is the rate of the Dingley law, and of the pending bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives. Fifty-three Senators, including all Republicans present, and Senators Hughes of Colorado and McEnery of Louisiana, voted in favor of the duty, and nineteen Democratic Senators voted against it. This particular paragraph has not been opposed by the low tariff Republicans and the vote was not significant. During the day Senator Clapp of Minnesota spoke at length in favor of lowering tariff duties and Senator Owen of Oklahoma upheld the constitutionality of an income tax. The House was not in session.

The entire session of the Senate Saturday was consumed with a debate on the schedule of duties on pig lead and its products. The stout opposition presented to the adoption of the amendments recommended by the committee on finance making the rates similar to those of the Dingley bill prevented a vote being reached before adjournment. The House was not in session.

The ability of the Republican majority of the Senate to muster a vote recommendation of the committee on finance on the lead schedule which contains the Dingley rate of the tariff bill in the place of the lower duties fixed by the House of Representatives, was fully demonstrated Monday when by a vote of 35 to 44 the Senate declined to reduce by one-quarter of a cent a pound the duty on pig lead as recommended by the committee on finance. In this vote eleven Republicans voted with the Democrats and two Democrats with the Republicans. By a viva voce vote the Senate adopted the rate of 2½ cents a pound on pig lead as recommended by the committee. At the conclusion of the session Chairman Aldrich stated that he regarded the vote as an indorsement of the action of the committee, and he expressed confidence that all the schedules of the committee would be upheld. Strenuous opposition by the Democrats in the House prevented the reference of the President's message recommending certain legislation for Porto Rico to the committee on ways and means. A motion by Mr. Garrett (Tennessee) directing the speaker to appoint forthwith the committee on insular affairs, which under ordinary procedure would have charge of the subject, disclosed the fact that a quorum was not present. Consequently the message was left on the speaker's table until Thursday. The Philippine tariff bill was reported and Mr. Payne gave notice that he would call it up Thursday.

Substantial progress was made in the consideration of the tariff bill Tuesday, the amendments of the committee on finance being upheld by the Senate by substantial majorities. A feature of the session was a general discussion concerning the great disparity between wholesale and retail prices of commodities. Republican Senators declared that this difference was so great as to demonstrate that the duty levied by a protective tariff had small effect on the price paid by the consumer. This feature of the discussion was precipitated by Senator Scott, himself a glass manufacturer. The schedule covering the products of lead was passed over upon the suggestion of Senator Aldrich, because, he said, the finance committee desires to make some changes in the duties, as previously recommended. The House was not in session.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

A cheering animation is seen to be pervading current operations in trade generally, and conditions have become distinctly encouraging as to the immediate outlook. The important developments include the stimulus which comes from seasonable weather and the opportunity to advance industrial and farming activities, together with a readjustment of labor controversies which threatened construction lines.

A significant feature which foreshadows increased production at the mills and factories appears in more numerous demands for furnace outputs, steel shapes and equipment. A tendency toward rising prices for supplies characterizes iron, textiles, minor metals and leather.

Important May settlements at the banks and board of trade were promptly liquidated and the demand strengthened for money, although the discount rate for choice commercial paper was unchanged.

Prices for the leading breadstuffs stand at the highest average for the season, and the profits to farmers induce larger expenditures for implements, materials and improvements. Forwardings have become heavier to Western points of fabricated steel, wire, hardware, machinery and electric appliances.

Outdoor work is again remarkably extended, and this creates exceptional deliveries of quarry products, plumbing supplies and lumber. Leather working trades obtain satisfactory contracts, especially for footwear and the market for hides is firmer. April permits for business structures were forty-five in number and $2,437,350 in value and compare with similar number and $1,082,900 in value for April, 1908.

Bank clearings, $295,991,231, exceed those of corresponding week in 1908 by 16.9 per cent and compare with $259,694,815 in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 30, against 23 last week, 36 in 1908 and 19 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 7, against 7 last week, 9 a year ago and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement in retail trade, some regaining of lost ground in farming operations and a distinctly more optimistic feeling as to trade for the future are the leading favorable features in this week's reports to Bradstreet's. Jobbing and wholesale trade for immediate delivery shows between seasons quiet, but fall trade is developing a better tone and enlarged demand. Perhaps the most encouraging feature of the week, business affecting one of the country's basic industries, is the enlarged demand, more cheerful tone and higher range of prices reported in the iron and steel industry. Coincidently, there is rather more doing in the Western coal trade.

The wool market is strong and active at higher prices and leather and hides are selling better at higher quotations, although fall business in shoes does not develop rapidly. Collections show little change and are still inclined to slowness. Taken as a whole, trade feeling is optimistic, and much is hoped from the passing of tariff uncertainty, the development of warmer weather and the progress of crop planting and growth to a point where the business community can safely make calculations as to ultimate out-

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with May 6 were 214, against 268 last week, 288 in the like week of 1908, 154 in 1907, 162 in 1906 and 158 in 1905.

Business failures in Canada for the week number 29, compared with 21 last week and 22 in 1908.—Bradstreet's.

ST. ELMO AUTHOR DIES.

Augusta Evans Wilson, Well Known for Her Novels, Passes Away.

Augusta Evans Wilson, author of "St. Elmo" and many other novels, popular a generation ago, and still widely read in the South, died at her home in Mobile, Ala., Sunday as the result of an attack of heart failure. She was born in 1835 in Columbus, Ga. She was the daughter of Matt Ryan and Sarah Howard Evans, one of the oldest families in the South.

While a child she removed with her parents to Texas, then a frontier State. Soon after the Mexican war, her people located in Mobile, Ala. It was there that, in 1868, she married Colonel L. M. Wilson. The marriage was a very happy one, and, although they had no children, they were known among their friends as the "lover couple" until Colonel Wilson's death in October, 1891.

It was in 1855 that her first novel, "Inez, a Tale of the Alamo," appeared. It met with only moderate success. Her second novel, "Beulah," published four years later, won instant appreciation and she soon became recognized as one of the leading writers of the romantic and intensely emotional school.

In 1864 she found time to complete "Macaria," which she sent to a Charleston, S. C., publisher, who copyrighted it under the laws of the "Confederate States of America." The book was published on coarse brown paper, all that the printer could obtain, and soon after it left the press the entire edition was confiscated by a federal officer. A blockade runner, however, smuggled one copy through to Havana, Cuba, whence it later was taken to New York City and published. The book met with heavy sales immediately.

"St. Elmo," the most popular, most criticised and most widely read of Mrs. Wilson's books, appeared in 1866, and it is still one of the "six best sellers" in the South. "Vashti" and "Infelice" followed quickly and in 1887, Mrs. Wilson published "At the Mercy of Tiberius," a strong argument against circumstantial evidence as a means of conviction. "A Speckled Bird" was published, and her last book, "Devota," appeared above a year ago.

5 GUILTY IN BUCKET-SHOP CASE

Cincinnatians Convicted by Jury of Using the Mails to Defraud.

The jury in the case of Louis W Foster and five others, who were charged with using the mails to defraud in conducting a so-called "bucket shop," returned a verdict of guilty in the United States Dsitrict Court in Cincinnati Friday. The men found guilty are Louis W. Foster, John Gorman, W. J. Campbell, A. C. Baldwin, John M. Scott and Edwin F. Heil. The penalty is a fine of from $1,000 to $5,000, eighteen months in the penitentiary, or both.

William J. O'Dell, who died in Cincinnati several years ago, left an estate estimated at $2,000,000. He amassed this fortune by running a bucket shop on a larger scale than ever before known in this country, having branches in all the principal cities and towns in the West and South. At his death the defendants found guilty Friday continued the O'Dell Brokerage Company. Gorman, Baldwin, Scott and Heil were formerly telegraph operators in the employ of O'Dell. William Dudley, telegraph operator, and Attorney Thomas Shay, both of whom are dead, were interested as partners at one time. All these men are credited with having cleaned up $1,000,000, most of which, however, Gorman and Dudley and Shay retained.

The verdict is a clean victory for the government, which contended the defendants did not even play the bucket shop game honestly, but by slow wires and fast wires to Chicago and New York took advantage of the market quotations and closed out trades with their customers to the best advantages to the defendants.

LOSES $110,000 PLAYING FARO.

Two Days at the Table Prove Expensive for New York Man.

Marshall Bell of Newburg, N. Y., lost $110,000 in two days' play at faro in New York City, according to an answer he filed in White Plains to a suit brought against him to recover $10,000 in a note, the signature to which he does not deny, but which he says had been given with no consideration and was in payment of a gambling debt. Joseph Mager, who gives his address only as Westchester County, is the plaintiff in the action, and asserts that he obtained the note from James Thompson on an assignment.

BOAT CAPSIZES; NINE DROWN.

Frightened Occupants Stand Up, Causing Fatal Accident.

Capsizing of a boat on the Susquehanna river at Wilkesbarre, Pa., resulted in the drowning of nine persons. William Andrews, of Port Griffith, took three of his brothers, two cousins, his brother-in-law, his sister and two nephews out for a row. The overloaded boat shipped water as soon as it got into the swift current. Some of those in the boat, growing frightened, stood up, screaming for help and the next moment it capsized. The nine occupants were carried away by the swift current.

THIS is an honest, straightforward picture of the life of to-day in a wideawake western town. It gives the reader a pleasant impression of a type of people and a phase of life well worth a closer acquaintance.

It is a crisp, forceful delineation of the career of William Parker, a prosperous banker and promoter, whose beautiful daughter, Evelyn, is the heroine of the story. John Saxton, an enterprising Bostonian, is sent west to close up some ranch and other investments for a Massachusetts trust company. This brings him in contact with varied types of humanity all of whom play an interesting part in a plot involving the manipulation of a traction line, the kidnaping of the banker's child and other events which go to make up an intensely graphic narrative.

THE MAIN CHANCE is a romance of youth, of love, and of success honestly won. It is buoyant, yet full of pathos, wholesome humor, convincing realism, admirable diction and bright sayings. Added to this is a rare, common sense touch that shows the practical side of real western life.

CHAPTER I.

"Well, sir, they say I'm crooked!"

William Porter, president of the Clarkson National Bank, tipped back his swivel chair and watched the effect of his declaration on the young man who sat talking to him.

"That's said of every successful man nowadays, isn't it?" asked John Saxton.

"They say I'm crooked," repeated Porter, with a narrowing of the eyes, "but they don't say it very loud, and I guess they don't any of them want to have to prove it. I'm afraid those Boston friends of yours have given us up as a bad lot, and they've sent you out here to get their money, and I don't blame them. Well, sir; that money's got to come out in time, but it's going to take time and money to get it."

"I believe they sent me because I had plenty of time," said Saxton, smiling.

"Well, we want to you you win out," returned Porter. "And now what can I do to start you off? I warn you solemnly against the hotels in this town; but we've got a fairly decent club up here, and you'd better stay there till you get acquainted. Just look over the papers till I get rid of these letters and I'll be free."

Porter turned to his desk. There was an air of great alertness in his small, lean figure as he pushed buttons to summon various members of the clerical force and rapidly dictated terse telegrams and letters to a stenographer. Saxton was impressed by the banker's perfect confidence and ease.

John Saxton had been sent to Clarkson by the Neponset Trust Company of Boston to represent the interests of a group of clients who had made rash investments in several of the Trans-Missouri States. Foreclosure had, in many instances, resulted in the transfer to themselves of much town and ranch property which was, in the conditions existing in the early '90s, an exceedingly slow asset. It was necessary that some one on the ground should care for these interests. The Clarkson National Bank had been exercising a general supervision, but, as one of the investors told his fellow sufferers in Boston, they should have an agent whom they could call home and abuse, and here was Saxton, a conscientious and steady fellow, who had some knowledge of the country, and who, moreover, needed something to do. Saxton's acquaintance with the West had been gained by a bitter experience of ranching in Wyoming. A blizzard had destroyed his cattle, and the subsequent depression in land values in the neighborhood of his ranch had left him encumbered with a property for which there was no market. His friends had been correct in the assumption that he needed employment, and he was, moreover, glad of the chance to get away from home, where the impression was making headway that he had failed at something in the vague, non-interest-paying West.

"Now," said Porter, presently, scrutinizing a telegram carefully before signing it, "I'll take you up to the office we've been keeping for your people, and show you what it looks like."

The room proved to be a small one at the top of the building. On the ground-glass door was inscribed "The Interstate Irrigation Company." The room contained a safe, a flat-top desk and a few chairs. Several maps hung on the wall, engineers' charts of ranch lands and irrigation ditches.

"It ain't pretty," said Porter, critically, "but if you don't like it you can move when you get ready. The bank is your landlord, and we don't charge you much for it. You've doubtless got your inventory of stuff with you, and here in the safe you'll find the accounts of these companies, copies of public records relating to them, and so on. You're going up against a pretty tough proposition, young man. You'll hear a hard luck story wherever you go out here just now; people who owe your friends money will be mighty sorry they can't pay. Many of the ranch lands your people own will be worth something after a while. That Colorado irrigation scheme ought to pan out in time, and I believe it will; but you've got to nurse all these things. Make your principals let you alone. Those fellows get in a hurry at the wrong time—that's my experience with Eastern investors. Tell them to go to Europe—get rid of them for a while, and make them give you a chance to work for them. They're not the only pebbles. I'll send the combination of the safe up by the boy, and you can get a bird's-eye view of the situation before lunch. Mr. Wheaton, our cashier, is away to-day, but he's familiar with these matters and will be glad to help you when he gets home. When you get stuck call on us. And drop down about 12:30 and go up to the club for lunch. Take it easy; you can't do it all in one day."

"I hope I shan't be a nuisance to you," said the younger man. "I'm going to fight it out on the best lines I know how—if it takes several summers."

"Well, it'll take them all right," said Porter, sententiously.

Left to himself Saxton examined his new quarters, found a feather duster hanging in a corner and brushed the rirt from the scanty furniture. This done he sat down by the open window, through which the breeze came cool out of the great valley; and here he could see, far over the roofs and spires of the town, the bluffs that marked the broad bed of the tawny Missouri. He was not as buoyant as his last words to the banker implied. Here he was, he reflected, a man of good education, as such things go, who had lost his patrimony in a single venture. He had been sent, partly out of compassion, he felt, to take charge of investments that were admitted to be almost hopelessly bad. The salary promised would provide for him comfortably, and that was about all; anything further would depend upon himself, the secretary of the Neponset Trust Company had told him; it would, he felt, depend much more particularly on the making over by benign powers of the considerable part of the earth's surface in which his principals' money lay hidden. As his eyes wandered to one of the office walls, the black train of a great transcontinental railroad caught and held his attention. On one of its northern prongs lay the region of his first defeat.

"Three years of life are up there," he meditated, "and all my good dollars are scattered along the right of way." Many things came back to him vividly—how the wind used to howl around the little ranch house, and how he rode through the snow among his dying cattle in the great storm that had been his undoing. With his eyes still resting on the map, he recurred to his early school days and to his four years at Harvard. There was a burden of heartache in these recollections. None of the professions had appealed to him, and he had not heeded his father's wish that he enter the law. The elder Saxton, who was himself a lawyer of moderate success, died before John's graduation; he had lost his mother in his youth, and his only remaining relative was a sister who married before he left college.

A review of these brief and discouraging annals did not hearten him; but he fell back upon the better mood with which he had begun the morning; he had a new chance, and he proposed to make the best of it. He put aside his coat and hat, and opened his desk. The banker had sent up the combination of the safe and Saxton began inspecting its contents and putting his office in order.

The books and papers began to interest him, and he was soon classifying the properties that had fallen to his care. He was so deeply occupied that he did not mark the flight of time and was surprised when a boy came with a message from Porter that he was ready to go to luncheon.

"You mustn't overdo the thing, young man," said the banker, amiably, as he closed his desk. "Don't you adopt our Western method of working all the hours there are. I do it now because my neighbors and customers would talk about me if I didn't, and say that I had lost my grip in my old age."

The Clarkson Club stood at the edge of the commercial district, and its brick walls rose hot and staring in the July sun as Porter and Saxton approached.

"Here we are," said Porter, leading the way into the wide hall. "We'll arrange about your business relations later. There's a very bad lunch ready upstairs, and we'll go against that first."

There were only a few men in the dining-room, seated at a round table. Porter exchanged salutations with them as he passed on to a small table at the end of the room. Those who were of his own age called Porter, "Billy," and he included them all in the careless nod of old acquaintance.

They went from the table for an inspection of the club, and arranged with the clerk in the office for a room on the third floor. They stopped in the lounging room, where the men from the round table were now talking or looking at newspapers. Porter introduced Saxton to all of them. Several of the men who shook hands with Saxton were railroad officials, but nearly every line of business was represented.

"If you're going with me," said Porter, "you'd better get a move on you." The whole group went out together, Porter leaving Saxton to the others, with that confidence in human friendliness which is peculiar to the social intercourse of men. They made him feel their honest wish to consider him one of themselves, making a point of saying to him, as they dropped out one by one, that they hoped to see him often. Porter led the way back down Varney street, carrying his hat in his hand. He said at the bank door: "Now you make them give you what you want at the club. I've got a house up here on Varney street—come up for dinner to-morrow night and we'll see if we can't raise a breeze for you. It's hotter than Sues here, and you'd better take my advice about starting in slow."

He went into the bank and Saxton took the elevator for his own office.

CHAPTER II.

Saxton was not over-sensitive, but the stiffness and hardness of the club house were not without their disagreeable impression on him as he sat at dinner toward the close of his first day in Clarkson. Two of the men to whom Porter had introduced him at noon proved to be fellow lodgers, and they exchanged greetings with him from the table where they sat together. They unsociably read their evening papers as they ate, and left before he finished. He was watching the fading colors of a brilliant sunset when a young man appeared at the door, and after a brief inspection of Saxton's back walked over to him.

"Aren't you Mr. Saxton? I thought you must be he. My name is Raridan. Don't let me break in on your meditations," he added, taking the chair which the waiter drew out for him. "I met Mr. Porter a while ago, and he adjured me to be good to you. I don't know whether this is obeying orders"—he broke off in a laugh—"that depends on the point of view."

"You are guilty of a very Christian act," Saxton said. "I was just wondering whether, after the sun had gone down behind that ridge over there, the world would still be going round."

"The world never stops entirely here," returned Raridan, "but the motion sometimes gets very slow. Mr. Porter tells me that you're to be one of us. Let me congratulate us—and you!"

Warrick Raridan was, socially speaking, the most available man in the Clarkson Blue Book. He was a graduate in law who did not practice, for he had, unfortunately, been left alone in the world at 26, with an income that seemed wholly adequate for his immediate or future needs. He maintained an office, which was fairly well equipped with the literature of his profession, but this was merely to take away the reproach of his busier fellow citizens. Raridan's office was the rendezvous for a variety of committees to which he was appointed by such unrelated bodies as the Clarkson Dramatic Club and the Diocesan Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church. He appeared every Sunday at the cathedral, which was the fashionable church in Clarkson, where he passed the plate for the alms and oblations of the well-dressed congregation.

He was capable of quixotism of the most whimsical sort. He had, for a year, taken his meals at a cheap boarding-house in order that he might maintain two Indian boys in school. He was not at all aggrieved when, at the end of the first year, they ran away and resumed tribal relations with their brethren. He chaffed himself about it to his friends.

It was not enough to say that Warry Raridan could lead a german or tie an Ascot tie better than any other man on the Missouri River; for he was also the best informed man in that same strenuous valley concerning the traditions of the English stage, and was a fairly good actor himself, as amateurs go. He had a slight literary gift, which he cultivated for his own amusement. His humor was fine and keen, and he occasionally wrote screeds for the local papers, or mailed pleasant jingles to his intimate friends.

"I'll wager that if you stay here a year you'll never leave," said Raridan, as they went downstairs together. "I've been about a good deal, and know that we who live here miss a lot of comfort and amusement which go as a matter of course in older towns. But there's a roominess and expansiveness about things out here that I like, and I believe most men who strike it early enough like it, and are lonesome for it if they go away.

"I think I understand how you feel about it," said Saxton. "There were times in Wyoming when Western life seemed pretty arid, but when I went back to Boston I was homesick for Cheyenne."

MODERN UNDERTAKING.

Methods That Have Greatly Simplified the Caring for the Dead.

Modern methods of undertaking now call for the highest possible skill in embalming and arranging every detail of burial.

From the old methods of placing a body on ice, with its attendant insanitary conditions, the undertaker has reached a high point of perfection in embalming, the New York Sun says, but not content with the advanced methods experiments are now under way which will, it is contended, make it unnecessary even to make any incision in a body when the embalming process is being performed.

One of the most advanced undertakers in this country says that within the next five years it will be possible to embalm by placing the body in an air-tight chamber and by subjecting it to a pressure of the gases of certain embalming materials to perform the work which is now done by injecting fluids into the veins.

Several firms in New York and other large cities have done much to relieve families of the very troublesome work which follows death in small houses, boarding houses or hotels by fitting up chapels where bodies are taken until ready for burial. Embalming is done in the establishment, burial clothes are furnished and watchers if required.

These firms also have clergymen to perform services, lawyers to attend to wills or insurance papers.

Frying Eggs.

The most disagreeable part of frying eggs is the sputtering and flying of the hot fat. This may be avoided by sifting a little flour in the pan before adding the eggs. This you will find to work like a charm and especially will the difference be noticed where there is a large family to supply.

The State of New Jersey has imported five stallions from Great Britain to enable its farmers to produce a higher type of horses.

All Who Would Enjoy

good health, with its blessings, must understand, quite clearly, that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best, each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to living aright. Then the use of medicines may be dispensed with to advantage, but under ordinary conditions in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time and the California Fig Syrup Co. holds that it is alike important to present the subject truthfully and to supply the one perfect laxative to those desiring it.

Consequently, the Company's Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna gives general satisfaction. To get its beneficial effects buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and for sale by all leading druggists.

The Danger of Knocking.

"The simplest proposition," said Senator Beveridge in a recent address, "must be set out with the utmost care in the wording, or misunderstanding, dissent, even anger, may result.

"Thus as a train was moving forth from a Cincinnati station a man stuck his head far out of the window.

"'Keep your head in there,' a station attendant shouted in warning, 'or it will be knocked off!'

"'Knocked off!' shouted the passenger. 'Knocked off, eh? Well, it won't be knocked off by anybody the size of you, you bandy-legged shrimp!'"—Philadelphia Record.

NOTHING IN SIGHT.

Life Had Lost All Interest.

Mrs. J. P. Pemberton, 854 S. Lafayette St., Marshall, Mo., says: "Doctors told me I had Bright's disease, and I believed it. I was getting weaker and weaker until I finally took to bed. The kidney secretions were scanty and seemed filled with dead tissue. I got thin and emaciated and then began to bloat all over. It oppressed my heart and I was in such a condition that I did not take an interest in anything. As a last effort I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The kidneys responded quickly, began carrying off the poisons, and when I had used twelve boxes the trouble was all gone. I now enjoy better health than ever before."

Much Ado.

The poet and the artist were quarreling bitterly at the other end of the room.

"What's the matter with them?" asked a caller.

"They are comparing notes as to which makes the most money," was the explanation. "It's strange how people can quarrel about next to nothing, isn't it?"

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

President Taft declares that "every city is under the strongest obligation to its people to furnish to the children, from the time they begin to walk until they reach manhood, places within the city walls large enough and laid out in proper form for the playing of all sorts of games which are known to our boys and girls and are liked by them".

According to Senator Bacon, for every dollar collected at the custom houses of the country, seven dollars are placed as a burden upon the people in the way of increased prices of the articles they consume, so that to raise $3,000,000,000 results in a burden of about $2,000,000,000 a year on the people of the United States. This is a conservative estimate but serves to demonstrate the perversion of our fiscal system to the uses of monopoly?

President Taft's message to Congress calls attention to the administration of affairs in Porto Rico and to the friction which has been developing for more than a year between the lower or elective branch of the legislature, and the upper or appointive branch. Prosperity and a political freedom never known under the Spanish rule have rather turned the heads of the people of this little isle and they have abused the power entrusted to them under the Foraker law. The Porto Ricans have yet to learn that self-government can never be obtained by forcible methods, but only through self-restraint and capacity and can be obtained only in time. In the meantime Uncle Sam will have to guard them from themselves and will insist that they do their part in helping to promote good order.

It is announced that progress is being made in the general staff, under the direction of Brig. Gen. William W. Wotherspoon, president of the Army War College, in the working out of a scheme for reorganizing the regular army on the basis of a peace footing of about 135,000 men. Mr. Dickinson will probably include the proposition in his first report as Secretary of War. The scheme contemplates the consolidation of the present quartermaster's subsistence, and pay departments into one department, to be known as the supply department, at the head of which will be a major general. The line would consist of three cavalary divisions of two brigades each, nine infantry divisions of two brigades each, and field artillery, engineers, signal corps, etc., for field operations, and sufficient coast artillery troops to man the seacoast defences.

how easily it is to be led astray in regard to distance in the mountains.

After leaving Pueblo you go west and immediately you come in contact with the mountains. Just at the edge of the mountains is the state prison, built as it seems right in the side of the mountain, and only one passage way to and from it, this being guarded at two places, so there is no possible chance of escape from there if the guards are not willing.

Next comes the most interesting scenery of all along the trip. We enter the Royal Gorge and almost like a tunnel, but one can see daylight above if he looks. It is a canyon the bottom of which is just wide enough to furnish room for the railroad and the small mountain stream and the top about 300 feet across. The walls are almost a perpendicular mass of black, gray and red granite, one being 3,900 feet high and the other 4,100 feet high. In this canyon there is a suspended bridge, being actually free from any stone abutments, and its only support comes from an overhead steel arch which supports the bridge by means of cables. After coming out of this canyon the valley was a little wider, but the mountains in the distance were still higher and the animal life was plenty. We saw several Rocky Mountain sheep, coyotes and one brown bear.

Further along through Colorado, I don't remember just where it is, but there is one place where the ground is very loose, and as you pass over this it seems as if the train were still for there is no sound or jar whatever; in fact, a canoe could scarcely ride nicer and easier.

It is again night and can see no more. I was not tired, so spent the evening with a young lady from Des Moines, Iowa, who was en route to San Diego, Cal. Going to sleep rather early and awakening with the same word "early" on the morning of the 9th. I saw nothing but cliffs, canyons, rocks, mountains, rivers, pines and other things that go to make up an extreme mountainous country. Through the west of Colorado the country was rather level and somewhat cleared, but over in Utah the mountains again continued. You pass through what seems to be an opening through a solid wall of rock. The wall appeared to be about 1,500 feet in height and rested on a base of about 25 to 35 feet wide, so you see it was very high to be balanced on such a small base. This is called "Castle Gate," and just on the west side of this are several large rocks, which in appearance are like an old castle, or rather, a fort. Here it is where we meet the Grand river, which the railroad follows and winds around with for several miles. When up in the mountains at Tenn. Pass, this being the highest place, 10,240 feet above sea level, one can feel their ears cracking and their head swelling and there is a peculiar sensation brought to bear upon one's person. The air is so light that in any breeze at all it is rather difficult for one strange to this air to get a good, big breath.

The outline of the country all the way to Salt Lake was very mountainous and broken and we arrived in Salt Lake City at 1:00 p. m., Friday, the 9th.

First, we being rather hungry, went up town to look for a good place to dine, and we ran across a place called the Golden Gate Cafe, and concluded to stop for dinner. It was certainly a good place. We had for our meal as follows: Mutton chops, French fried potatoes, pickled beets, coffee, bread and butter, and we paid 25 cents for the same, and if anyone can eat cheaper than that and have the same things in Indiana, I never heard of it. Why, eatables are not so high, but a room of any decency costs about $15 per month.

After dinner we walked over to a barber shop and got some of the railroad real estate off our persons before trying anything at all. Afterward we got into a clothing store and talked business with the proprietor there, but he said that we were about thirty days too early; that business had not opened up yet. We then went up to the state house and Arthur talked with the state school superintendent for about a half hour. We then walked up town and looked around for a little business, but the Mormons hold a prestige there, so we determined to spend the rest of the afternoon in climbing a mountain and we did. We went north from town to the end of the Uintah range and started up a smaller one and so on up until we had risen to a height of over 3,000 feet above the town of Salt Lake. The mountains are very steep and we had very great difficulties in getting up, but we finally reached the summit of that range. A map on the next page will show just where we were. On our way out to the mountains we went down through a mountain road which followed a little creek as clear as a crystal, fresh from the mountain snow. Where we crossed this creek there was a foot board through the bushes and for good luck we put a small rock in the creek and marked it so that if we ever got back there we would know it again.

Salt Lake City is certainly a gem when it is a question of a pretty town for one so big. It has beautiful paved and wide streets which are washed all the time by the overflow of the mountain stream which supplies the city with pure, clear water. You can see where the stream strikes the town by the map enclosed, and it is so divided and controlled that part goes in all directions and washes all streets. You can see along the curb stone of any street a small stream of water running and washing the street dirt away.

Fort Douglas is located at the north end of town, as shown on the map. This is a large, massive structure built of rock, and a full regiment of soldiers are posted there.

There are mountains on the north and east and to the south and west there is an extensive plain containing the Great Salt Lake.

When we were up on the mountain, as indicated in the map, we could look west across the Great Salt Lake to the distant range at a distance of about 150 miles and the mountains farther away seemed to fade away into a blue veil or gauze, as a light cloud. We had a view of the whole town and country all around. It may seem strange that one can see so far, and possibly some who read this will not believe this, but we went to reliable authorities and took their word for the distance.

There are under way of construction here three large buildings—two office and one hotel building. The hotel is to be 15 stories and the other two eleven stories high.

The Mormon buildings here cover three squares. They are very large and beautiful. The Temple, the largest one, was under way of construction forty years and is certainly a fine building.

To sum it all up, Salt Lake City has clean, wide streets, nice buildings in general, fine scenes and views of the mountains, a summer and health resort at Great Salt Lake, friendly people, and it suits me the best of any town I ever was in, and I would advise that anyone going through that way stop off and see a few things that are new to Indiana people.

In the evening in due time we went to the depot to go to Ogden, Utah, but the train was nine hours late, so we went up town, secured a room and got a good night's sleep and left the next morning at 8:20.

Arriving at Ogden o. k. and having to wait until 2:45 p. m. for a train on the O. S. L. R. R., we checked our grips and surveyed a part of the town, which to us both seemed a busy little place, and a clean town, too. Ogden is quite a railroad center, having five railroads connecting at that point.

At 2:45 sharp we were started again on our journey, arriving at Pocatello, Idaho, at about 8:00 p. m., ate lunch, changed cars and soon were off. While on this part of the trip we happened to get acquainted with a girl from near Idaho Falls, and certainly she could say a few things about a "wild west town." We changed cars again at Nampa, Idaho, and took the short line for Boise, Idaho, arriving there about 5:00 p. m. We had been changing and moving around all night, and we certainly were tired out right, so we went up town, secured a room, took a bath, a shave, a general clean-up, after which we walked down town to get a good breakfast and took in a few sights around the business part of town, walked to the post office and received a letter from the folks. Going back to the room wrote a few cards and some letters.

Went to church at 11:30 at the M. E. church, this being Easter Sunday. They surely had a fine service. In the afternoon went out to the state penitentiary, but could not get in on account of being late. On the way back to town saw a water elevator which was run by the power of the stream in which it was placed. Also I noticed that there were plenty of girls, because nearly every fellow had two or more and still there were several loose.

One of the most enjoyable sports in Boise is horse back riding, it being Sunday afternoon there were just lots and lots of people out riding through the mountains which lie just to the north of town. It surely must be fun or so many aristocratic people would not indulge in it.

Went to the room early and decided to take a good night's sleep, for we had been awake since Friday night and it was now Sunday night so went to bed about 7:00 and slept till about 7:00 next morning, got up and the first thing I looked after was to get me a new suit case and repack my belongings.

Brushed up, I went down town to the business college to see about things, but he said things were dull at present but thought that fall would be a good time to start in that country.

After having a good, long talk with Mr. Link, the general manager of the college, I was introduced to a man, a member of the commercial club, and I gave him a few names of people around home whom he was going to send circulars to, concerning the town of Boise and the surrounding territory. Again I wrote some cards and letters, and while Arthur went out for a walk. When he returned it was late, but I wanted to take a walk, so we both walked out to the foot hills of the mountains and climbed upon them to get a view of the town. These hills are only about 400 or 500 feet high, but it gives a nice view of the town, and really you people would be surprised to know how many people from the city enjoy an evening walk among those hills just as we did. While on the way out, however, we passed a yard in which we saw a woman playing with what we thought was a young lion, but upon approaching a little closer discovered that it was only an overgrown cat whose fur was long and seemed to stand up straight. It seemed to me as large as an ordinary dog.

Upon returning to town it was already dark, and we went to the Boston Lunch for supper. While out walking in the evening we had got warmed up a litle and the pure air and all made our cheeks red and when I went to supper I looked as though I were blushing all the time. I tell you that the pure mountain air certainly makes one feel like getting around and doing something. We then returned to our room and slept till train time at 2:25 a. m., went to Nampa and caught the Overland Limited, a train of eleven coaches, straight through to Portland, Ore.

Still the mountains continued in all their splendor and beauty and it seemed as if all the West was nothing but mountains, but when we got up along the Columbia river we had an interesting feature added, and that was SAND. There seemed to be nothing but rock, water and drifting sand. The sand was fine, and a good wind with the motion of the train it filled the air like a dust. It is simply a fright. Why, in the coaches in the windows and around the door there were little sand heaps. It got in our hair, eyes and clothes and we had a good time getting it out, too. In places the sand would heap up fifty or sixty feet high, and at times we had to stop until the track could be cleared so as to allow the passage but after this came the Cascade mountains, which are in themselves worth the trip. There were so many water falls and rapids, some falling from 100 to 150 feet. Here the mountains are covered with an immense growth of pine, fir and underbrush. The town of Mt. Hood appeals to one traveling by as a typical mountain village, being built on the foot hills of the mountains, and everything was very green and flowers in bloom, making the town very beautiful.

All along the Columbia river is filled with fishing boats, nets and wheels, but not many were working because it was too early in the season for the fish to spawn.

Darkness then came on again, hiding to our weary eyes the beauty of nature which we were passing through. Arrived in Portland after night, took a walk up town and ate supper, returned to the depot and sent a few cards while waiting on the train.

FORGIVENESS.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Forgive us, as we forgive our debtors."—Matt. 6:12.

Perhaps forgiveness is the least understood of all the virtues. To many it means a willingness to see others forego vengeance; to others it means a process of defeating the ends of justice; to some it seems only an evidence of cowardly weakness. It is so easy to be merciful to those who have wronged others and also who have injured us when they are stronger than we are.

Forgiveness is the setting aside of our own selfishness and our own personal considerations in the attitude we take toward the wrongdoer. It is the refusal to take vengeance; it is the setting of one's self on the side of the offender in order that we may help him to recover from his transgression. It makes one the friend and not the enemy of the one who may have done us the wrong.

The great common prayer teaches us all to forgive just as we hope to be forgiven. This would be a dark world if every act of enmity and hostility set up its eternally sundering chasm between us if our offense against the infinite affection set us forever at variance with the Most High, shut out from all possibility of return, or if the act of anger or greed made forever impossible further friendship with the one injured.

Passion, greed, anger, envy, selfishness in their many guises prompt us to wrong our fellows, to wound them and work them ill. Sometimes the most grievous damage is done by simple want of thought. If every wrong made an implacable enemy the whole world would soon be but a battlefield, every man's hand against his neighbor, and all progress and peace forever impossible.

Forgiveness among men makes possible the doing of the will and the coming of the kingdom of the eternal goodness. Only as we can bear with one another, only as we can be patient, make allowance for weakness and passion, give up the natural desire for vengeance and seek to heal the breaches constantly being made by selfishness can men live together in peace and good will.

To forgive, then, is to refuse to take the attitude of a foeman toward my fellows who may do me wrong or injustice or may leave undone their duty, and, more, it is to take the attitude and play the part of a friend to them. It is to turn a deaf ear to the demands of selfishness, self-love and self-pride, and to have a larger consideration for the good of others and for the well-being of all than for my own prestige or personal advantage.

Forgiveness may not always smile with tenderness on the wrongdoer; it may wither and scorch like a whirlwind. But it will upbraid, it will denounce and it will punish even all in love, all with the intent of bringing back the wanderer from love's way and never with the thought of getting even, of paying back in kind or of satisfying vengeance. It will by every means seek to lift to your own level the man who has degraded himself by injustice or passion instead of trying to get even with him.

Forgiveness does not defeat justice; it puts another motive in the act. Justice is that process which teaches us all that this is an orderly world in which one must reap as he sows, consequences must follow causes. Forgiveness lets justice take its way; it does not shield the willful criminal from the fruitage of his acts, but it lets them fall on him only in the measure of education, for his help and restoration, and never in the measure of personal pleasure in retaliation.

The old law says, An eye for an eye; this new law says, Love your neighbor, strive to do good even to those who would do you ill, make friends of your enemies. Vengeance emphasizes and seals the enmity; forgiveness breaks down its battlements and makes friends where there might have been lifelong foes.

Forgiveness, then, is the antithesis of enmity; it substitutes helpfulness for hatred. It is altogether apart from the matter of forgetting the wrong done; sometimes you can only help another effectually as you remember his past acts. But forgiveness takes the sting out of the memory; it remembers with calm, with growing desire to help. It does not overlook; it sees through and beyond the fault to the possibility of what the other may be with a little help and love.

Forgiveness is the attitude which says, I will not be at war with my own fellows even though they do wrong me. I will fight, but I will fight the greed and wrong along with them. When a man has fallen under temptation, even though I am thereby injured, I will help him fight with him and not against him, and so bring the kingdom of peace and good will to come among men.

MORAL AND MATERIAL POWER.

By Rev. Thomas Reed Bridges.

Endowed with power from on high.—Luke 24:49.

Power is something every man wants. We are all struggling to get out of the rank of the nobodies into the rank of the somebodies.

Money is power, and in its pursuit men tear open mountains and sail wide seas and toil early and late. Knowledge is power, and to possess it men read books and excavate buried cities and make experiments in the laboratory and exhaust the brain with perplexing thought. Social position gives power also, and there are those who will make any sacrifice and endure any humiliation to see their names printed in some exclusive list of first citizens.

The struggle for power is as old as the race. Man is inferior in physical strength to many of the animals, but holds dominion over them all. He won his position by annexing power, which he found all about him in abundance. From humble beginnings he has multiplied power almost infinitely. His achievements with extending steam and flashing lightning and magnetic currents surpass the dreams of Aladdin.

The earth has an inexhaustible endowment of material force. In the beginning God equipped it with exhaustless energy. We have learned to command this force. We have taught this energy to serve us. The result is our material civilization.

But man is a spirit. His higher life demands something more than millions of horse power. He needs to wield a moral force surpassing all material force. He is called to the task by annihilating weakness and sin as he has annihilated time and space. The earth is full of moral energy. There has been manifested through the ages a power which impels this world from darkness into light. It is the power from on high. It is the spirit of holiness. All the currents of life are moving in our direction. The universe goes on to perfection.

As we have annexed the material, so we may annex the moral power. In both cases knowledge and obedience are the keys which unlock the storehouses of energy. We have discovered the laws which govern the forces of nature. We work in harmony with these laws and nature is our servant. If we oppose them they crush us, so we must learn the laws of God and obey them. We must bring ourselves into harmony with the forces of righteousness.

The power from on high enters the heart of the good man. Then he is invincible. He can stand like Athanasius against the world. He is free from doubt. He knows not fear. He draws strength from the inexhaustible fountain of strength. In every controversy he can say: "They that are for us are more than they that are against us." He knows that one with God is a majority.

Race for a Wife

BY

HAWLEY SMART

CHAPTER XXIII.

The classic heath is crowded; ay, overcrowded. The carriages stand four or five deep next the ropes. In a carriage very close to the cords are Harold Denison, Maude and Grenville Rose—or rather, I should say, were, insomuch as they had arrived there together; but though Denison had for some years eschewed the greensward and its fatal seductions, of course there were numerous old friends whom he had known well in the days that the sky blue and silver braid was prominent at most large race meetings. He had naturally drawn off to chat over old times with some of them, and left Maude in charge of her cousin.

The girl was in a state of the greatest excitement. She had never before seen a race of any kind. It was a bright day; but not warm, except in the July meeting, it never is on Newmarket Heath. Thanks to her father's experience, Maude was heavily shawled and therefore comfortable. In the last few minutes Rose had confided to her what a big stake he stood to win on Coriander, "Though, Maude, recollect, I shan't be a penny the worse if he loses."

"Oh, Gren, how can you stand still? I can hardly, as it is, though it is you who are to win, and not me."

"My darling, you are as much interested as I am. I never did bet before; I never shall again. Can't you guess why I have this time?"

"I think so," she replied, as her face flushed. "It's for me, is it not?"

"Yes, Maude; if Coriander wins, I can claim you from your father at once; if he don't—well, you will wait while I work, won't you?"

"You know I will. I'm yours whenever you come for me," whispered the girl; "and as long as we may write, I shall never——" and she paused.

"What?" inquired her cousin.

"Don't ask me!—well, never be as unhappy as I have been."

Grenville pressed the little hand that rested in his, but said nothing; in which he showed great discretion. In love-making, silence is often more effective than conversation.

But the noise of the bursting cork is hushed in Jarvis'—the ring is deserted. Flys and horsemen tear across to where the cords, placed in funnel shape, indicate the finest of the Rowley miles. Every one is anxious to see the result of the first great three-year-old race of the season. Carefully have the horses been scrutinized in the Birdcage and elsewhere, and the scattered ring, from the foot of the Jockey Club stand and from amidst the carriages, still shriek forth spasmodic offers against outsiders. Grenville has never left his cousin's side. As he has already said, the turf was a great mystery to him. All he knows—and this is derived from Dallison—is, that Coriander is first favorite, and that Fauxpas and The Saint are each backed for a great deal of money, and that the Lightning Colt is a dangerous outsider.

"Now, Maude stand up on the seat. Are the glasses right? Try."

"Quite; I can see beautifully."

"Very well; now repeat what I have taught you. What are the colors?"

"Coriander, black and white hoops; Fauxpas, green and white braid; The Saint, cherry and black cap; and—and, oh, dear, I forget that Lightning thing."

"Mazarine blue; don't forget again. Do you see those two bushes? As soon as we hear they are off, bring your glasses to bear on those. Wait till you catch the horses in their field, and then follow them till you don't want glasses."

"Yes, Gren; but my hand shakes so. I wish you hadn't told me about all that money if Coriander wins. Oh, dear, why don't they start? What are they waiting for?"

Ah, me! Faces are a study, the five minutes before the flag falls for a great race. The teeth will go through the lip, or the mouth will twitch, and the hand that holds the race glass will shake a little on these occasions when the possessors are involved in high stakes on the result. Once over, and as a rule it would be difficult to tell whether a man had lost much or little. Winners look jubilant, losers bland at the hoisting numbers. To study faces, use your eyes while the horses still cluster at the starting post.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Suddenly is seen tumult amongst the distant horsemen, who have gone down some way to witness the start, and almost before Maude can realise that they are all tearing towards her, the fierce shriek of "They're off!" announces that the race for the Two Thousand has begun. She has barely time to get the bushes within the field of her glasses when half a dozen of the gay silken jackets pass them. Flushed, panting, excited, and utterly unaccustomed to the thing, Maude grinds her little white teeth in her agitation as she finds they have passed the point more like the glimpse of a kaleidoscope than anything else; then, for a second, she can't find them again. "Oh, Gren!" she gasps, "which is Coriander? I forget! Was it blue, or black and white hoops? I've lost them. Oh, dear, that green thing will win! Oh, which is Coriander?" And there was a slight gurgle in Maude's throat.

"The Saint wins! No, he don't; he's beat! Fauxpas wins! No, the Lightning Colt; Fauxpas"—when, sharp and shrill as a clarion above the Babel, came Sam Pearman's cry of "Coriander wins for a monkey!" Coriander wins. Coriander—in a walk, and the black and white hoops glide past the Judge's chair a clever length in front.

Grenville draws a big breath. "Is it true?"—and he glares anxiously at the telegraph board. From where he is it is impossible to tell for certain, though he thinks the favorite won. Hurrah! Up goes the mystic 7 that represents Coriander on the cards; and, with a yell, Grenville sends his hat into the air. Even as he does so, he feels that Maude leans wondrous heavy on his shoulder; he turns just in time to hear a low gurgling sound, and catch his cousin in his arms. She has fainted. He lays her back in the carriage, and sends one of the innumerable lads that infest a race course in hot pursuit of water. Meanwhile he, in his ignorance and confusion, bathes her temples with sherry from a big flask. It has the desired effect, as if it were a more scientific, or, at all events, more generally recognized remedy, and ere the myrmidon returns with water, Maude has come to herself with a choking sob or two.

"Oh, Gren, I didn't—I don't—I shall be well in a minute." And after drinking, first a little sherry, and then a little water, Maude, with rather pale cheeks, began to wonder how she could have been so foolish.

"I got so excited about it Gren; I couldn't help it. You shouldn't have told me what a lot of money you might win. Besides, I never saw a race before."

"Never mind, you are all right now. We'll go home as soon as we can catch your father; there's nothing else to see—not for us, at least, darling. I've won you now, Maude!"

"No," said the girl, with a smile, and a slight pressure of her little hand; "you did that before. But where's your hat?"

"I don't know," said Grenville, looking very confused. "I threw it up in the air when the horse won and then you fainted, and I never thought of it again. Looks awkward, don't it?"

"Oh," laughed Maude, "I'm so glad. Why, you were as bad as me. I think we had better go home, Gren; we are not fit to go racing. We haven't the requisite control of our feelings, and make shows of ourselves."

But though the hat, a little the worse for its aerial excursion, was speedily returned by some jackal of the heath, Harold Denison was not so easily come at, and the cousins were perforce doomed to see the day out. Though I doubt whether they ever saw another race, they bore themselves resignedly, and I fancy passed a tolerably pleasant two hours. A gentleman on a neat hack, after a moment's hesitation, pulled up at their carriage. Lifting his hat to Maude, he nodded cheerily to Rose, and leaning over, murmured:

"No end of congratulation. I'm very well satisfied; but, Gren, you have played for high stakes, and I suppose I may say have won them. Adieu!" And with another glance and raising of his hat to Maude, he cantered off.

"Who was that?" she inquired.

"Dallison, who did all my betting for me."

"And did he know?"

"He knew what that £5,000 meant to me. He's right, Maude. I have been playing high stakes, and to think that I should win all."

Mr. Denison turned up in the most jubilant spirits. He had had a delightful day, and won a hundred and odd pounds, he told them. "Don't think I am going on with it, Grenville, but as I had come to see 'The Guineas' run for once more, I determined to risk my pony on it, and backed the horse that had already been such a good friend to me; and as that was successful I invested two or three more ten-pound notes on the strength of my first win, so that my gains mounted up, my selections having proved successful."

Within twenty-four hours Grenville Rose had had a long confabulation with his uncle, and succeeded in convincing him that he was, thanks to the additional £5,000, in a position to marry his cousin at once; he could make up now £600 a year, and he was sure business would shortly come to him. Denison demurred a little, but he certainly was under some obligation to his nephew about that mortgage. The domestic current, too, ran strong in Grenville's favor; so, after a little, he yielded, saying that "if they thought fit to begin the world on that income, he had no more to say, further than that they could expect but little help from him in his lifetime."

Maude and Grenville racked little of that, and in three months' time they were married; and one of the handsomest wedding presents Maude received was, strange enough to say, from Sam Pearman, with a very correct note, to the effect that, "Forgetting all the past, he trusted Miss Denison would still consider him as a friend and well-wisher."

Moreover, so immensely struck was that gentleman with Grenville's acuteness in the prosecution of the heriot claim, that he threw a considerable amount of his own and friends' legal business into Rose's hands; and three or four years after that memorable Two Thousand you seldom saw a horse case in which Grenville was not employed. Briefs, too, fell thick from other sources; the Coriander story was bruited about, and the attorneys pronounced it smart, clever—very, and endorsed their opinions practically.

The picture of that distinguished race horse may be seen in the dining room at Mannersley, and Pearman often contemplates it, and soliloquizes as he does so, "Yes; you cost me £10,000 hard cash, and the prettiest girl in England; but you won the Guineas and the Derby—you did."

Over Rose's study mantelpiece hangs a print of that same celebrity. Deep in his papers in the evening, sometimes, when work is so plentiful that it becomes hard to grapple with, Maude will glide softly in, and say "Come, Gren; tea is in. Come and drink Coriander's health—the dear old horse that gave us to each other." And he yields to the voice of the charmer, and, to the benefit of his health, enjoys a sturdy little boy of some three years old or so, who, having been once taken by his mother into Court, has determined on being a judge almost immediately.

It is a solemn compact between Maude and Mr. Pearman that when anything happens to Coriander—who, having much distinguished himself, has now retired into domestic life—one of his illustrious feet is to be placed at her disposal.

The squire is still muddling on, but, thanks to an occasional look-up from Grenville, and a change of bailiffs, continues to about make both ends meet. As for Mrs. Denison, with her temperament, cannot you fancy the delight she has in a visit to or from her darling daughter, and with a couple of grandchildren to pet and spoil?

(The End.)

BLAZE 1,800 FEET HIGH.

Above It a Column of Smoke Ascended to a Height of 9,000 Feet.

The greatest oil fire in history is supposed to have been the fire which by a conservative estimate destroyed more than 5,000,000 barrels of oil last year in the San Geronimo field near Tampico, Mexico.

The oil stratum was struck at a depth of 1,848 feet in a six-inch cased well. The torrent of oil burst forth and was quickly followed by a blowout of gas which opened a big orifice in the earth's surface, swallowing up the derrick and whole drilling outfit, including the engine and boiler. The gas and oil were ignited from the fire under the boiler and the great fire was in this manner started.

It burned for sixty-two days. The vortex or crater through which the oil poured was gradually enlarged until it was more than 500 feet wide. A rim of rocks and earth was formed around its outer edge resembling a volcano's crater. According to the Technical World the blaze extended to a height of from 1,400 to 1,800 feet and the column of black smoke rose above it to a height of about 9,000 feet. On top of the smoke rested a great white cloud of vapor which was estimated to extend skyward to an additional height of 7,000 feet. The blaze could be seen 200 miles.

The great oil fire was extinguished by means of six centrifugal pumps which were kept constantly busy for two weeks throwing mud and water into the crater. Heavy discharges of dynamite around the rim of the orifice also aided in the extinguishing work.

Shortly after the flames were put out the oil burst forth again in greater volume than ever and its output was estimated at 150,000 barrels a day. It has been a difficult problem to care for the oil. The Mexican government sent several hundred soldiers to the scene to assist the owners of the well in building earthen reservoirs for temporary storage of the product. The oil overflowed these reservoirs and large quantities escaped into the San Geronimo River and Lake Tamiahua.

Learn to Use the Telephone.

"Only about one person in every ten knows how to properly use the telephone," said a district manager of one of the local companies. "Yes, sir, I'll stand by my guns on that assertion; and I think I can prove my point. Nine out of every ten persons talk entirely too loud over the telephone. They actually shout and make so much noise that they drown out all semblance of clearness. Then they can't hear, and the first thing you know there is a complaint about poor connection and faulty service. The correct way to talk over the telephone is to talk as you do in ordinary conversation, or even a trifle lower. People can't seem to realize that the telephone will carry a whisper even. No, they must talk loud enough to be heard from 10th and Chestnut streets to Germantown, if those be the connected points. Just try yourself. Try the low, well modulated voice, and see if you do not get infinitely better service out of your telephone in the future."

A Magician Mystifies.

Two men sat in the hotel lobby glowering at the smoke which they blew toward the ceiling. At intervals they broke into argument which involved personality.

"What's the matter with them?" asked a salesman.

"One is the proprietor of this hotel," answered the accommodating clerk, "the other owns the only newspaper in town.

"Last night both went to the theater where a magician asked for a handkerchief. A man jokingly handed him a big square of muslin.

"The magician studied the cloth for a few minutes, and then said, dramatically:

"'Thank heaven, there's at least one clean sheet in this town.'

"And now the publisher says the hotel bed clothes were alluded to, and the other insists that was the town's newspaper."

Kidney Ailment

I want every person who suffers with any form of Kidney ailment, no matter how many remedies they have tried, no matter how many doctors they have consulted, no matter how serious the case, to give Munyon's Kidney Remedy a trial. You will be astonished to see how quickly it relieves all pains in the back loins and groins caused by the kidneys. You will be surprised to see how quickly it reduces the swelling in the feet and legs, also puffiness under the eyes, after taking a few doses of this remedy. You will be delighted to see the color returning to your cheeks and feel the thrill of vigor and good cheer. If your Urine is thick or milky, if it is pale and foamy, if it contains sediments or brickdust, if it is highly colored or has an offensive smell, if you urinate frequently, you should persist in taking this remedy until all symptoms disappear. We believe this remedy has cured more serious kidney ailments than all the Kidney medicines that have been compounded. Professor Munyon believes that the terrible death rate from Bright's Disease and Diabetes is unnecessary and will be greatly reduced by this remedy.

Go at once to your druggist and purchase a bottle of Munyon's Kidney remedy. If it fails to give satisfaction I will refund your money.—Munyon.

Fell from Scaffold and Injured His Back.

Thirty years ago James C. Lee, of 1100 9th street, S. E., Washington, D. C., fell from a scaffold and seriously injured his back. In telling about it he says: "My suffering was terrible; from the small of my back all around my stomach was just as if I had been beaten with a club. I tried all kinds of plasters—belladonna, capcine and porous—without getting relief, and bought so-called electric belts but none of them did me any good.

One day, while working near my daughter's house, my back pained me so badly that I had to quit. I went into the house and lay down for ease. My daughter had a bottle of Sloan's Liniment in the house and she rubbed my back well with it and gave me some to take home. I used six and a half bottles of Sloan's 25c. Liniment and can do as much work now as any man in the shop, although I am sixty-seven years old. I would not be without Sloan's Liniment for any consideration and recommend it to anyone suffering pain."

ELDERLY PEOPLE HELPED FREE

The last years of life are the sweetest, and yet the most difficult to prolong. It is then that the greatest care is exercised in maintaining bodily health. But the chief care should always be with regard to the food you eat and whether you are digesting it properly. You should not allow yourself to become constipated.

No doubt you have tried salts and catbartic pills, purgative tablets, etc., and have come to the conclusion that they are violent in action and do but temporary good. Listen, then, to the voice of experience with regard to a wonderful and mild laxative, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is not new, only we are trying to find new friends for it.

A. A. Felts, of Johnston City, Ill., suffered from stomach trouble for six years and found his cure in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. His wife uses it too with success. We could name hundreds of others. Some heard of it first through neighbors or friends; others through the doctor's offer to send any sufferer from a stomach, liver or bowel complaint a free sample bottle for trial, without charge. If you will send your name and address he will send you a trial bottle direct to your home. If it proves itself as he claims then continue the treatment by buying a 50-cent or $1 bottle of your druggist, as all of them sell it. Old people, like children, should look for purity, and it is well to mention that the purity of this remedy is vouched for with the U. S. government. Also, though a free bottle is sent to prove its merits, results are always guaranteed from the regular bottles bought of druggists, who will refund your money if it does not satisfy you. Send at least for the free test bottle to-day.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell bldg., Monticello, Ill.

SKIN TROUBLES CURED.

Two Little Girls Had Eczema Very Badly—In One Case Child's Hair Came Out and Left Bare Patches—Cuticura Met with Success.

"I have two little girls who have been troubled very badly with eczema. One of them had it on her lower limbs. I did everything that I could hear of for her, but it did not give in until warm weather, when it seemingly subsided. The next winter when it became cold the eczema started again and also in her head where it would take the hair out and leave bare patches. At the same time her arms were sore the whole length of them. I took her to a physician, but the child grew worse all the time. Her sister's arms were also affected. I began using the Cuticura Remedies, and by the time the second lot was used their skin was soft and smooth. Mrs. Charles Baker, Albion, Me., Sept. 21, 1908."

AUTHORS' HOMES IN MAINE.

Fine Residences at Kittery, York Harbor and Kennebunkport.

William Dean Howells has long had his summer home at Kittery, his house being surrounded by a fine old garden in which the author has often been seen at work, while his library is an old barn set in the midst of an apple orchard. the Lewiston (Me.) Journal says. George S. Wasson also has a beautiful home at Kittery, while a little farther up the coast, at York Harbor, is the summer home of Thomas Nelson Page. This beautiful place is situated on a high point overlooking the sea, and to York Harbor, too, comes John Fox every summer to be the guest of Mr. Page. At Kennebunkport one sees the beautiful summer home of Margaret Deland, and Meredith Nicholson, the Indian author, also has a home at Kennebunkport. Of course there are many noted writers at the islands in Portland harbor. Clara Louise Burnham, who summers at Bailey's Island, and whose splendid books have appealed to hundreds, is of course well known throughout Maine. While Kate Douglas Wiggin has not a home on the coast, yet she, too, prefers the Maine atmosphere, and her home at Hollis is too well known to need especial mention. But before other Maine authors began to realize the opportunities to be found on our Maine coast, Harriet Beecher Stowe selected Orrs Island as a spot rich in material, while our own Whittier, in his "Dead Ship of Harpswell," long ago recognized the romance and poetry to be gleaned from our shores.

LIGHT BOOZE.

Do You Drink It?

A minister's wife had quite a tussle with coffee and her experience is interesting. She says:

"During the two years of my training as a nurse, while on night duty, I became addicted to coffee drinking. Between midnight and four in the morning, when the patients were asleep, there was little to do except make the rounds, and it was quite natural that I should want a good, hot cup of coffee about that time. It stimulated me and I could keep awake better.

"After three or four years of coffee drinking I became a nervous wreck and thought that I simply could not live without my coffee. All this time I was subject to frequent bilious attacks, sometimes so severe as to keep me in bed for several days.

"After being married, Husband begged me to leave off coffee, for he feared that it had already hurt me almost beyond repair, so I resolved to make an effort to release myself from the hurtful habit.

"I began taking Postum and for a few days felt the languid, tired feeling from the lack of the stimulant, but I liked the taste of Postum, and that answered for the breakfast beverage all right.

"Finally I began to feel clearer headed and had steadier nerves. After a year's use of Postum I now feel like a new woman—have not had any bilious attacks since I left off coffee."

"There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Whitley county officials will unite in a campaign for better roads there.

Elkhart officials have declined to permit Sunday performances by the five-cent theaters.

Mrs. Mary Moore and her infant son living west of Owensville, were seriously injured in a runaway. The accident was due to a broken buggy shaft.

Mrs. C. G. Keehn has sued the city of Ligonier for $10,000 damages for injuries sustained in falling on the sidewalk one dark night when no street lights were burning.

While lying upon a couch Mrs. Elmer Slick, of Wabash, rolled upon a pair of shears which had been left there. One of the blades penetrated her right leg near the ankle, puncturing a large arterry, and the woman came near bleeding to death before assistance reached her.

Mussel diggers are establishing camps along the Wabash river, between Mt. Carmel and Grayville. Few pearls of value have been found this season. John Steveson sold a small one for $45, and a number of slugs for smaller sums. Steveson is said to have made more than $2,000 last season, during the mussel season.

Many millinery creations were damaged beyond repair at the store of Mrs. George H. Cook, in Columbus, when a large section of plastering gave way and fell from the ceiling. A new sewing machine was ruined and a showcase was smashed. Miss Ethel Dudley, one of the trimmers in the store, stepped away from the place where the plastering struck about ten seconds before it fell.

Louis Mottaz, of Jeffersonville, has a Maltese cat which has adopted as her own three fluffy young chicks, which came into the world four days ago. Their mother is missing and it is surmised that pussy may have removed her before entering upon her novel realtionship to the little ones. Mottaz intends to see that these at least shall not be added to her larder when they get bigger.

Mice getting into a box of matches set the store of Charles Pugh on fire, and his meat market and stock of groceries at Elwood, valued at $1800 were destroyed. It was discovered after the fire that the rats had gnawed a hole in a case containing matches and mice had crawled through this hole, building a nest in the box. A mother and four little mice were cremated in the match pile, showing how the fire originated. Stock insured for $1400.

Col. Henry Friday, of Shelbyville, has a male cat that is very desirous of "mothering" several chickens. For the last two weeks the cat has selected two or three different nests in the yard of Mrs. Deprez, a neighbor, and when a hen, after laying an egg, steps from the nest, the cat will chase her away and crawl into the nest, where he will remain for some time. When he finally leaves the eggs remain in the nests uninjured. Mr. Friday intends trying the cat as a "hatching cat" when hatching time comes.

By aid of an X-ray machine a needle was removed from the stomach of the eight-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Clement Frampson, who live north of Logansport. The needle had been in the mother's dress and while she was handling the baby it became imbedded in the child's flesh, at the stomach it broke off. The child was brought to Logansport and the broken needle was located by aid of the X-ray and was then extracted. Although the stomach wall was perforated the child, it is believed, has good chance for recovery.

A distinctive type of the early settler days has passed away in the death of Peter Wells, of Elwood, who was the first undertaker in the central part of Indiana, and who made, by actual count 3374 coffins by hand from measurements furnished to him by families of the district. Wells often recalled an order from a farmer, long since dead, who came into his shop with a bean pole 6 feet and 9 inches in length and said it represented the height of his wife, who had just died. Mr. Wells was one of Elwood's wealthiest citizens. He was 83 years old and had been an Odd Fellow 62 years.

Silas Holler, of near Millersburg, has three daughters that are deaf mutes, and each has spent seven years at Indianapolis learning the language. The mother of the girls is not a mute, but for three years has been blind. The grandmother on the mother's side was a mute, but had no children who were, the affliction falling on the grandchildren. These three daughters have two sisters who are married and one brother who can talk and hear. With all of these odd afflictions it is said to be a happy family. One of the girls who can neither hear nor speak is a fine steamstress and an excellent milliner.

Dr. W. N. Fowler, of Bluffton, says he will not accompany Walter Wellman on his second attempt to reach the north pole by means of a dirigible balloon. Dr. Fowler was a member of the Wellman party last year.

John Crowell, a farmer living on the Linton road four miles south of Jasonville, reports the almost complete loss of four acres of onions by hail. The onions were about ten inches high and they were beaten into the ground.

Schuyler C. Holly, of Logansport who placed a shotgun in his hen-house to catch thieves, opened the door himself and was instantly killed.

Augustus Palmer Kent, a well-known newspaper man in northern Indiana, died suddenly last week. He had been editor of the Elkhart Daily Review for thirty-seven years.

Thirty Chicago newspaper men will make up the cast of "The Stolen Story" at the Bush Temple and among the number will be Louis B. Chaplin, formerly of Warsaw and Fort Wayne.

Isaac J. Brock, seventy-eight years old, father of eight children, grandfather of forty-three and great-grandfather of eighteen children, died at his home near Evansville last week. This was the first death of an adult in the Brock family in seventy-five years.

The Pleasant Ridge Oil company shot for the second time the No. 1 well drilled by the company some months ago on the Grimes farm, north of Portland. Recently the hole filled to a considerable depth with oil. Following the shot the well showed a strong pressure of gas.

The farm residence and barn of David McBride, four miles northeast of Salem, was burned to the ground a few days ago. Mr. McBride is positive it was the work of incendiaries, as he says he tracked them for a mile by scattered straw. The loss was $3,000, with no insurance.

Charles Williams, of Evansville, who recently sprung into notoriety by his claims that he had invented a new explosive that could be discharged by a wireless apparatus, made another demonstration by placing the explosive across the Ohio river. The shot shook the city and many people rushed from their homes.

On Wednesday, June 2, Kokomo will give an automobile day. The event will celebrate the sixteenth anniversary of the completion of the first automobile built in Kokomo. There will be races, a parade and contests of skill in driving. Invitations will be sent to all automobile clubs in Indiana to attend in a body. The aim will be to make it the greatest automobile meet ever held in the state.

In a recent case a negro was called to testify in the Clark Circuit court at Jeffersonville. "What is your name?" asked the attorney, "Thomas Mudd," was the reply. "And what is your occupation?" "I am a mud carrier," said Mudd, and when asked where he lived he stated that it was at Claysburg, that being the northern suburb of Jeffersonville. His evidence, however, was clear enough.

The official school census figures show 16,355 persons of school age in Fort Wayne, a gain of 268 over the count of last year. There were about 300 more than this in the 1907 count and Superintendent Study believes the full loss in 1908 will be recovered next year. The gain this year was general with no districts showing any amazing increases. Mr. Study is assured of retaining his place on the State board.

W. C. Hall, a rural mail carrier of Shoals, and a man of unquestioned veracity, reports that he has a cat which has adopted two young rabbits. Mr. Hall lives on a farm at the edge of town and recently a cat on the place was deprived of two kittens, leaving her with one young one. She was noticed, a few days later, with three young, and on examination it was found that two of them were rabbits. The cat, little kitten and its foster brothers, the rabbits, are living together agreeably and make a very interesting family.

Dale Andrew, a fourteen-year-old boy near East Mt. Carmel, was killed. An older brother was running the corn crusher at their home, it being worked with a big circular sweep turned by a team of horses. The older brother went into the house a few minutes. Hearing a scream he rushed out, only to find his little brother lying dead near the crushing box. The sweep had struck the child, and he had been knocked so that he head fell in between the grist stone and the crushing box. At the first scream the team stopped, but death had already resulted.

A peculiar coincidence has been discovered in connection with the appointment of Louis Shaffer as chief of police of Danville, Ill. Louis Schafer is the new police chief in Lafayette, Ind., the names being the same except for the slight difference in spelling. Only a few years ago both men worked together as machinists in the Monon shops in Lafayette. Mr. Shafer moved to Danville, and two months ago was selected chief of police to succeed Charles H. Powell, now captain of police. Mr. Shafer and Mr. Schafer are warm friends, and when the latter learned of the former's appointment he sent a telegram to the Danville man congratulating him on his appointment.

Mrs. Frieda Weiss, aged 43 years, died at Fort Wayne of tetanic convulsions, the result of taking strychnine when she believed she was taking stomach medicine, to which she had been accustomed.

Because her widowed mother wanted her to marry a man she didn't love Miss Vesta Hunsaker, a pretty girl of 24, committed suicide at Evansville. She left a letter for James Tremley, of Indianapolis, telling him she could not be his wife.

Answer This Question

When a remedy has lived for over thirty years, steadily growing in popularity and influence, and thousands upon thousands of women declare they owe their very lives to it, is it not reasonable to believe that it is an article of great merit?

We challenge the world to show any other one remedy for a special class of disease which has attained such an enormous demand and maintained it for so many years as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the famous woman's remedy for woman's ills. Unless it is a very good medicine and the claims made for it are honest, such a record would have been impossible—fraud or misrepresentations would long ago have been detected and the business gone into oblivion. Read this unsolicited letter:—

Melbourne, Iowa:—"I suffered for many years with female troubles, inflammation, and bearing-down pains, so that I was unable to do my work.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended, and I am so thankful for the great good it has done me. I feel that I am a living advertisement for this medicine as I have influenced so many of my friends to use it, so thankful am I that it restored me to health."—Mrs. Clara Watermann, R. D. 1, Melbourne, Iowa.

When a woman like Mrs. Watermann is generous enough to write such a letter as the above for publication, she should at least be given credit for a sincere desire to help other suffering women. For we assure you there is no other reason why she should court such publicity.

We say it in all sincerity and friendship—try this medicine.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Obituary

Viola, little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Olen Dermott was born in Concord Township, DeKalb County, June 23, 1908, and departed this life May 17, 1909, aged 10 months and 24 days. Her last illness was of six weeks duration, her little life being sapped out by a complication of diseases. She was a beam of sunshine who shed light and comfort on all those about her, but while it is so hard to give up our dear baby we can comfort ourselves with the thought that as she was called away in the purity of childhood, she will escape the many deep sorrows and bitter disappointments of this world and will enjoy forever the beauty, purity and happiness of the "Kingdom of Heaven." "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of heaven." She leaves a father, mother, one sister and many sympathising relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at the Coburntown church, Rev. F. A. Thomas of Hamilton, officiating. Elza Kinsey funeral director. Burial at the Alton cemetery.

A Fierce Encounter

The following is taken from The Tribune-Progress, published at Mountain View, Oklahoma, of May 21, 1909.

"The word quietly passed around Monday evening that a particularly ferocious badger had been captured in the wilds of the Wichitas and was being held in captivity in a barrell under the band stand, and that Jim Dowling's bird dog would be matched against it as soon as the stores closed at 6:30. A large crowd gathered to see the desperate encounter. Several courageous individuals offered to drag the animal out of the barrel, but young Barney, who works at the depot was allowed the privilege. He wrapped the rope around his hands, placed his feet and gave a mighty tug, throwing the captive clear to the Union Supply corner. But, what was Mr. Barney's surprise, on looking around, to find that it was just a tame family badger."

Dedication May 30th.

Plans have been made for the dedication of the soldiers monument and cannon, which is being mounted in the public square, to be held Sunday afternoon, May 30th. Former congressman, C. C. Gilhams, who secured the cannon for Auburn, has been engaged to deliver the address and will be present on the occasion of the dedication of the cannon.

It will be remembered that just before Mr. Gilham's term in congress expired he wrote to Postmaster Kuhlman, that he would secure a cannon for Auburn if they would agree to pay the freight on the same. This the Commercial club agreed to do and then they made a demand for popular subscriptions from all over the county and also asked the county commissioners to appropriate $350, which they did, to pay the cost of the foundation for the mount. With the other funds solicited a bronze tablet has been ordered, bearing the inscription, "Dedicated to the Memory of DeKalb County's Soldiers," also the date of dedication and the number of soldiers that this county furnished in the war of the Rebellion, 1313, and the number of the Spanish-American war, 230.

F. Hopkinson Smith, the versatile genius who writes novels, builds lighthouses, paints pictures, constructs sea walls, lectures and does globe trotting, is a native of Baltimore and is sixty-seven years old. He usually spends the summer at his villa near Venice and has discovered an ingenious method of ridding himself of the importunities of the Italian beggars who infest all the highways and make the tourist's life a burden to him, says the New York Times.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH.

"There is nothing the lazzaroni fear so much as the evil eye—that is, an eye the least shade off the normal in any respect," said Mr. Smith, "and it was by playing upon this superstition that I finally discovered a way of ridding myself of these pests. I have a small pocket compass, about the size of a monocle, and when their demands become too importunate I simply fit it into my eye and turn and gaze upon them. The effect is instantaneous. When this sinister orb, with its quivering needle, is fixed upon them, they turn and run away as fast as their legs can carry them."

A local newspaper is absolutely necessary to any community. It is the home paper that keeps the people of the community in touch with each other by giving them all the news of their own neighborhood and county. For that alone they are of value and worth far more than the small subscription price. They keep the local pride and progressive spirit aroused and in various ways are worth far more to a community than a community ever spends on them. The daily paper, with its large news service and quicker facilities, may in some instances overshadow the weekly, but the weekly home paper fills a place in the hearts of the people that a daily cannot fill. It comes to your home as an old tried friend.

Roosevelt Gets Another Rhino.

A dispatch from Nairobi, East Africa, says: Theodore Roosevelt has begun his hunting expedition from the Ju Ja ranch of George McMillan, whose guest he is. He went out a few days ago and bagged a female rhinoceros. The first shot wounded her in the shoulder and the animal fled to the bushes. Mr. Roosevelt followed on horseback, and six more shots were required to bring her down. The head and skin weighed 532 pounds. Colonel Roosevelt's ambitions was also realized in the killing of a big hippopotamus. The hippo was encountered as the party was returning for the day, and after hope had been abandoned. Colonel Roosevelt now has every specimen of African big game to his credit except an elephant and a zebra.

8 TO 16 YEARS IS SENTENCE FOR HAINS

Captain Convicted of Killing W. E. Annis Gets Indeterminate Term in Prison.

JUDGE DENIES A NEW TRIAL

Defendant Seems Overcome by Court's Words and Father and Brother Deeply Affected.

Capt. Peter C. Hains, Jr., U. S. A., convicted of manslaughter in the first degree for killing William E. Annis at the Bayside Yacht Club last August, was sentenced Monday by Justice Garretson in the Supreme Court in Flushing, L. I., to an indeterminate sentence of not less than eight years, nor more than sixteen years, a hard labor in State's prison.

John F. McIntyre, counsel for the defendant, made the usual motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and also contrary to law. Justice Garretson denied these motions. Mr. McIntyre then raised the point of jurisdiction of the Supreme Court over the defendant, contending that he had never been released from jurisdiction of the federal government and therefore the case was not properly before the court. Mr. McIntyre also stated that Dr. Brush, who had been an expert witness for the defense, had examined Capt. Hains since he was convicted and found him insane. Justice Garretson said there was no evidence to that effect before the court and he declined to consider the motion in regard to jurisdiction.

The court clerk then instructed Capt. Hains to come to the bar and proceeded to ask him the formal questions put to a man about to be sentenced. The prisoner seemed dazed and seemed to have some difficulty in understanding the questions. Lawyers McIntyre and Young of the defense stood on either side of Capt. Hains and assisted him in answering the questions of the court clerk.

Referring to the nature of the case the court said that Capt. Hains had been indicted for murder in the first degree, the severest crime against society, and, although there had been a great deal of sympathy injected into the case, the law did not allow a man to punish another for wrong he had suffered or to wreak vengeance on the man who had wronged him.

After Justice Garretson had imposed the sentence Capt. Hains sat down and dropped his head on the table before him. He seemed overcome with emotion for a few moments, but soon recovered himself and sat upright, staring at the court. Gen. Hains, the defendant's father, and Maj. John Powers Hains, who were in court, displayed much emotion. Immediately after sentence the prisoner's lawyers asked for a stay of sentence for a few days to take an appeal. Justice Garretson said the case would take the usual course, and gave the defense twenty-four hours in which to file an appeal.

PITCHER IN RAGE KILLS MOTHER

Charles Rapp of South Bend Stabs Himself to Death After Crime.

Charles Rapp, aged 32 years, well known as a former pitcher of the old South Bend Green Stockings, a crack independent base ball club, Saturday evening murdered his mother with a hammer and butcher knife and then committed suicide with the same knife, death occurring at the county jail in South Bend, Ind., where he was taken by the police. The murder was most revolting and brutal, and beyond a statement made by Rapp just before his death, that he intended "to get the whole family," there is no explanation for the crime. Until Rapp fell a victim to the liquor habit he was one of the most popular young men in the city.

Action Against Brokerage House Taken in New York.

The big stock and grain house of Tracy & Co., with two Chicago offices, three offices in New York, and branches in five other cities, went into the hands of a receiver late Monday afternoon. A rough estimate made by attorneys for various creditors placed the liabilities as $1,250,000, with assets of $500,000, although the amounts named in the petition were only $1,000,000 and $250,000 respectively. William W. Tracy, formerly president of the Lincoln Park board in Chicago and a well-known Illinoisan, was head of the company.

Unfortunate ventures in the taxicab business in New York and Chicago and a hard squeeze in the recent grain corner engineered by James A. Patten were ascribed as the chief causes of the failure in dispatches from New York, where the formal court action was taken. Although no announcement of the exact cause of the failure was made by E. A. Benedict, the receiver, he said he understood money lost in taxicab promotions figured in the outside ventures. The firm is a member of the Chicago Board of Trade and the New York Stock Exchange, but is said to have had no stock exchange obligations.

RUSSIAN "ROBIN HOOD" SLAIN.

Robber Chief Who Long Joked with Police Finally Is Killed.

The noted robber chieftain, Savitzky, the "Robin Hood" of the Russian revolution, has been killed by members of the rural guard. With three members of his band Savitzky was surrounded by the guard in a village near Mohlev, and after a fight that lasted for four hours all four were killed. One member of the guard lost his life in the encounter. Savitzky, who was a high schol student when he took to brigandage, had been the terror of the police of the provinces of Tchernigov and Mohiley for several years, but he was a source of amusement to the rest of Russia on account of his dare-devil exploits. He delighted in playing fantastic tricks on the police. Once, on a wager, disguised as a priest, he visited the governor of this province and various other officials. It was his custom to rob only the rich, and he distributed his spoils among the peasantry with a lavish hand. He finally was betrayed by a member of his band.

The directors of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad have decided to refund all its underlying bonds, except those of the Illinois division or a total near to $65,000,000 at 4 per cent. Holders of the old bonds will have the option of an exchange for the new.

During the last season the Pennsylvania Railroad Company set out 303,000 trees, including pines, larches, spruce and hardwoods. In its nursery it set out 313,000 forest seedlings for future transplanting, and planted 222 bushels of red oak acorns, from which 1,500,000 seedlings are now growing. It also planted a large quantity of black walnut, chestnut and hickory, practically all of which have given complete germination.

Slason Thomson, manager of the Bureau of Railway News and Statistics at Chicago has issued the fourth annual report of that bureau covering the business year ending November 30, 1908. It shows that the loss of the railroads of the country on account of the panic and ensuing depression fas far greater than estimated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The railroads complain that the commission experts made the mistake of basing their estimates on a period which included some of the prosperous months of 1907. Thomson finds the total loss in gross earnings amounted to $330,000,000 as compared with the commission's estimate of $164,000,000, and that the loss in net earnings was $129,340,460 as compared with the commission's estimate of $111,051,006. The bureau also finds that the effect of the 2-cent passenger laws was a loss of $25,000,000 in gross earnings. The heavy loss in net earnings is accounted for partly by the expenditure of $32,000,000 in meeting the new requirements as to methods of accounting and as to the hours and conditions of labor. The net capitalisation of the railroads has increased 76.5 per cent, but this is only 9 per cent a mile more. The railroads carried 189.5 more passengers a mile and 260 per cent more tons of freight a mile than in 1888.

H. H. ROGERS IS DEAD; VICTIM OF APOPLEXY

Standard Oil Magnate Suddenly Stricken While at His New York Home.

NEWS SHOCKS WALL STREET

Romantic Career of Man Who Rose from Poverty to Vast Wealth—His Genius as Organizer.

Henry H. Rogers, the Standard Oil magnate, died at his home in New York City Wednesday of apoplexy. He arose as usual, but began to feel ill, complaining of numbness and nausea. Before anything could be done he died. The news of his death came as a surprise and shock to Wall street. This was the second illness of this nature suffered by Mr. Rogers, the first having occurred in July, 1907. His health had been failing for several years, and he had curtailed his financial operations to some extent, but he continued to perform the duties of vice president of the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. Rogers was for many years one of the most prominent financiers of the country. He took a leading part in all of the enterprises undertaken by the Standard Oil group of capitalists, was vice president of the Standard Oil Company, and was the active spirit in the organization of the Amalgamated Copper Company, of which he was president up to the time of his death. He also was interested in a number of railroads.

Henry H. Rogers was a man of mystery. So silent, so secretive was he that not even the date of his birth was a matter of record or knowledge. As nearly as can be determined, this colossus of modern finance was born in 1840. Fairhaven, Mass., was his birthplace. The story of his life is one of those romances of modern finance in which present-day America is so rich. He rose from newsboy to head of the wealthiest corporation in the world and master of a personal fortune of perhaps $125,000,000 in fifty years.

When he was still in his twenties the story of the oil that was spouting from the earth in Pennsylvania reached his ears, and he determined to go to the oil fields. This was in the '60s, when the oil business was new. Methods were crude and wasteful, and the first principles of economic refinement and handling of the product were just being worked out. He started at the bottom and learned the business from the ground up. Then he met three men who were to become his life-long associates—John D. and William Rockefeller and Henry M. Flagler, and later, John D. Archbold. These men evolved an audacious scheme to concentrate the business of the refinement and transportation of oil into one colossal firm and corner the market. The credit—or discredit—for this idea is popularly given to John D. Rockefeller, but financiers who claim to know have stated repeatedly that the idea really was Rogers' and that he was the driving power behind the new Standard Oil Company from the first.

STOESSEL LEAVES RUSSIAN JAIL

General Sentenced for Surrendering Port Arthur Released by Czar.

Lieutenant General Anatole M. Stoessel and Rear Admiral Nebogatoff have been released from confinement in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul by order of Emperor Nicholas of Russia. The health of both men has been gravely affected by their confinement.

General Stoessel was found guilty by court-martial of surrendering the fortress of Port Arthur to the Japanese and was serving a sentence of ten years imprisonment. Nebogatoff was sentenced to be interned in a fortress for the same length of time for surrendering to the enemy at the battle of the Sea of Japan. Stoessel began his sentence March 20, 1908, while Nebogatoff took up his quarters in the fortress April 15, 1907.

Rear Admiral Gregorieff and Lieutenant Smyrnoff, subordinate officers under Nebogatoff in the Russo-Japanese war, were pardoned and released from the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul a month ago. These officers had been sentenced to death for having surrendered their commands, but in view of extenuating circumstances their sentences were commuted to ten years imprisonment, which they began serving in 1907.

GEORGE MEREDITH IS DEAD.

Succumbs in London to Attack of Heart Disease at 81.

George Meredith died at 3:35 Tuesday morning in London. The news of the great novelist's illness caused deep and widespread regret and it had been generally feared that because of his great age—he was past 81 — the chances of recovery were slight. The immediate cause of death was heart failure, following grave symptoms that developed early in the evening. Mr. Meredith's illness began on May 14 and he steadily declined since that time.

George Meredith was born Feb. 12 1828, in the county of Hampshire, England. He was educated in Germany but returned to England after qualifying for a university and read for the bar. He gave up this for literature after meeting with success in articles written for prominent reviews of his time. In 1851 Meredith published "Poems," his first volume of verse, and since then throughout his active literary life he published poems and books every few years. Recognition, however, was slow, and not until 1885 when the novelist was 57 years old and "Diana of the Crossways" appeared, did he receive the recognition which was to be his until his dying day. After the success of "Diana of the Crossways" Meredith's early works were recognized as masterpieces and his novel, "The Ordeal of Richard Leverel," is now ranked as one of his best efforts. Of his many prose works those which are declared by critics to be certain of undying fame are "The Egoist," published in 1879, "Rhoda Fleming," published in 1865, and the two books already mentioned.

Work of Congress

Again the committee on finance was upheld when the Senate Friday voted down an amendment by Senator Cummins to lower the duty on round iron, etc., by a vote of 35 to 42, and upheld the House rate, which was recommended by the Senate committe. Almost the entire session was given up to a debate on the profits of the United States Steel Corporation, and toward the end of the day personalities were freely indulged in by Senators. This occurred when Senator Root had spoken in defense of the finance committee and in criticism of Senators who had complained of the failure of that committee to provide more ample information concerning various schedules. Mr. Money, addressing himself directly to the Senator from New York, resented what he characterized as a lecture to the Senate, and said that if the Senator from New York desired less speaking in the body "he should do less of it himself." Senator Beveridge proposed an amendment to the tariff bill increasing the tax on tobacco and its products, and charged that by continuing the shortweight packages of the Spanish war period the tobacco trust was reaping a harvest of $21,000,000 a year. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The lowering of duties in the case of eight or ten classes of wire goods contained in the steel schedule, upon motion of Senator Aldrich, in charge of the tariff bill, gave great encouragement Saturday to Senators who are advocating a revision downward. With evident gratification Senator Beveridge greeted these proposed amendments by the chairman of the finance committee by declaring: "Good, that's making progress." The entire session of the Senate was devoted to the steel schedule, the section relating to penknives being under consideration when, at 4:44 p. m., the Senate adjourned to meet at 10 o'clock Monday morning, one hour earlier than the Senate has been beginning business. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

A comprehensive discussion of the income tax by Senator Sutherland of Utah and an extended speech by Senator Depew in support of the pending tariff bill consumed most of the session of the Senate Monday. Mr. Sutherland argued against the constitutionality of a federal income tax law and declared that such a tax should be left as a means of revenue for the States. Before adjournment a couple of hours were devoted to a discussion of the cutlery schedule of the tariff bill. A ruling by Speaker Cannon prevented the reopening in the House of old wounds of the Civil War. Mr. Hollingsworth of Ohio sought to justify as a matter of privilege his recent resolution objecting to the placing of the portrait of Jefferson Davis on the silver service to be presented to the battle ship Mississippi because of editorials in certain Southern newspapers hurling all sorts of epithets at him. The editorials were read. The speaker declared that as the editorials did not attack Mr. Hollingsworth in his representative capacity he could not continue. The result of Mr. Hollingsworth's attempt was to get into the Congressional Record a number of uncomplimentary remarks about himself and with nothing to offset them. Although its consideration was completed, the Philippine tariff bill was not finally acted upon for the want of a quorum. A resolution offered by Mr. Burleson (Texas) was adopted, requiring the Attorney General to furnish information regarding the steps taken by him to annul the contract whereby the United States Steel Corporation absorbed the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company unless in so doing the public interests would be affected. The House adjourned until Thursday.

-:—:-

After devoting the greater part of Tuesday's session to debate, the Senate passed upon a number of important committee amendments to the tariff bill. It also disposed of adversely an amendment by Mr. Stone restoring the Dingley rates on razors. On that vote most of the progressive Republicans voted in the affirmative with the Democrats. More than two hours were devoted to a discussion of a resolution by Senator Gore to investigate the cost of production at home and abroad and the relative price of commodities at wholesale and retail. The resolution was referred to the committee on finance. Considerable progress was made in the adoption of several sections of the tariff bill. There were several amendments decreasing duties formerly reported by the committee, but some of the others adopted increased duties. The House was not in session.

CHAPTER II.—(Continued.)

Saxton was walking beside Raridan in the lower hall. He felt an impulse to express gratitude for his rescue from the loneliness of the twilight; but Raridan, talking incessantly, and with hands thrust easily into his trousers' pockets, led the way into the reading room.

"Hello, Wheaton, I didn't know you were at home," he called to a man who sat reading a newspaper, and who now rose on seeing a stranger with Raridan. "This is Mr. Saxton, Mr. Wheaton."

"Oh, yes," said the man introduced as Wheaton. "I wondered whether I shouldn't see you here. Mr. Porter told me you had come."

Wheaton seemed very serious, and had not much to say. He had just come home, from a terious trip to the western part of the State, he said, on an errand for his bank. He was tall, slim and dark. There was a suggestion of sleepy indifference in his black eyes, though he had a well-established reputation for energy and industry.

"Mr. Porter told me you were quartered here. I hope they can make you comfortable. I'm personally relieved that you have come. Your Boston friends were getting very impatient with us. We shall do all in our power to aid you; but of course Mr. Porter has said all that to you." His smile was by a movement of the lips, and his eyes did not seem to participate in it. He did not refer again to possible business relations with Saxton, but turned the conversation into general channels. They sat together for an hour, Raridan, as was his way in any company, doing most of the talking. They seemed to have the club house to themselves. Now and then one of the negro servants came and looked in upon them sleepily. A clerk at the desk in the hall read in peace. A party of young people could be heard entering by the side door set apart for women; and muffled echoes of their gaiety reached the trio in the reading room.

"That's back in the incurables' ward," said Raridan, in explanation to Saxton.

"It isn't nice of you to speak of the gentler sex in that way," admonished Wheaton.

"Oh, there are girls and girls," said Raridan, wearily. "It does seem to me that Mabel Margrave is always hungry. Why can't she do her eating at home?"

"He's simply jealous," Wheaton remarked to Saxton. "He always acts that way when he hears a girl in the ladies' dining room, and doesn't dare go back and break in on some other fellow's party."

"When you show signs of mental decay, it's time for us to go home, Wheaton." Raridan held out his hand to Saxton. "I'm glad you're here, and you may be sure we'll try to make you like us. Wheaton and I live in a barracks around the corner, with a few other homeless wanderers. I hope to see you there. Don't be afraid of the Chinaman at the door. My cell is up one flight and to the right."

"And don't overlook me there," Wheaton interposed. "I suppose we shall see you down town very often. Mr. Raridan is the only man in Clarkson who has no visible means of support. The rest of us are pretty busy; but that doesn't mean that we shan't be glad to see you at the Clarkson National."

CHAPTER III.

William Porter lived well, as became a first citizen of Clarkson. His house stood at the summit of a hill near the end of Varney street, and the gradual slope leaping up to it was a pretty park, whose lawn and shrubbery showed the intelligent care of a good gardener. The dry air was still hot as John Saxton climbed the cement walk which wound over the slope at the proper degree to bring the greatest comfort to pedestrians. The green of the lawn was grateful to Saxton's eyes, which dwelt with relief on the fine spray of the rotary sprinklers that hissed coolly at the end of long lines of hose. Interspersed among the indigenous scrub-oaks were elms, maples and cedars, and the mottled bark of white birches showed here and there. The lawn was broken by beds of cannas, and it was evident that the owner of the place had a taste for landscape gardening and spent his money generously in cultivating it. The house itself was of red brick dating from those years in which a Mansard roof and a tower were thought indispensable in serious domestic architecture. There was a broad veranda on the river side, accessible through French windows of the same architectural period.

A maid admitted Saxton and left him to find his own way into the drawing-room, through which a breeze was blowing pleasantly from across the valley. Saxton sat in a deep wicker chair, mopping his forehead. He heard a light step crossing the hall, and a girl, still singing softly to herself, passed back of him to a little stand which stood by one of the drawing room windows. The back of the wicker chair hid him; she was wholly unconscious that any one was there. The breath of the sweet peas which she was distributing suddenly sweetened the cool air of the room. Seeing that the girl did not know of his presence in the house, and that she would certainly discover him when she turned to go, he rose and faced her.

"I beg your pardon!"

"Oh!" The sweet peas fell to the floor, and the girl looked anxiously toward the hall door.

"I beg your pardon," Saxton repeated. "I think—I fear—I wasn't announced. But I believe Mr. Porter is expecting me."

"Yes?" The girl looked at John for the first time. He was taking the situation seriously, and was sincerely sorry for having startled her. "Father will be here very soon, I think." She moved toward the door with dignity, ignoring the fallen flowers, and Saxton stepped forward and picked them up.

"Allow me." The girl took them from him, a little uncertainly and guardedly, then returned to the vase and placed the flowers in it.

"Thank you very much," she said. "I think I hear mf father now." She went to the outer door and opened, inclining her head slightly as she passed John, who also heard Mr. Porter's voice outside. He was remonstrating with the gardener about the position of the sprinklers, which he wished reset in keeping with ideas of his own.

"Well, Evelyn?" he said, as he came up the steps. Saxton could hear the young woman making an explanation in low tones to her father. Mr. Porter stood suddenly in the door.

"Well, this beats me," he began, effusively, coming forward and wringing Saxton's hand. "I'm not going to try to explain. I simply forgot, that's all." He took Saxton's arm and turned him toward the door where the girl still stood, smiling.

"Evelyn, this is Mr. Saxton. He's come to dine with us, but I forgot all about it. See here, Evelyn, you've got to square this for me," he concluded, and she came forward and shook hands with Saxton.

"I don't know how it can be 'squared.' This is only one of father's lapses, Mr. Saxton. You may be sure he didn't mean to do it."

"No, indeed," declared Porter, "but I'm ashamed of myself." He waved the young people to seats and vanished into the hall.

Porter returned and launched into statistics as to the number of trees that had been planted in the State by school children during the past year. The maid came to announce dinner, and Porter talked on as he led the way to the dining room. As they were taking their seats a boy of 12 took the place opposite Saxton.

"This is my brother Grant," said Miss Porter. The boy was shy and silent and looked frail. The efforts of his sister to bring him into the talk were fruitless. When his father or sister spoke to him it was with an accented kindness. He would not talk before a stranger, but his face brightened at the humor of the others.

"You'd better get Mr. Saxton to tell you how much fun ranching is," said Porter, turning to the boy, who at once became interested in Saxton.

"I'm going to be a ranchman," the lad declared. "Father's going to buy me the Poindexter ranch some day."

"That's one of Mr. Saxton's properties. Maybe he'd trade it to you for a tin whistle."

"Is it as bad as that?" asked Saxton.

"Just wait until you see it. It's pretty bad."

"The house must have been charming," said Miss Porter.

"And that's about all it was," replied her father.

It was warmer outside than in, but Porter pretended that it was pleasanter out of doors, and insisted that there was always a breeze on the hill at night. Raridan appeared at the step presently. They all rose as he came up, and he said to Saxton as he shook hands with him: "I see you've found the way to headquarters. All roads lead up to this Alpine height—and I fear—I fear—that all roads lead down again," he added, with a doleful sigh, and laughed. He began making himself greatly at home. He assured Mr. Porter, with amiable insolence, that his veranda chairs were the most uncomfortable ones he knew, and went to fetch himself a better seat from the hall.

"Mr. Raridan likes to be comfortable," said Miss Porter in his absence.

"But he finds pleasure in making others comfortable, too," Saxton ventured.

"Oh, he's the very kindest of men," Miss Porter affirmed.

"What a nuisance you are, Warry," said Porter, as the young man fussed about to find a place for his chair. "We were all very easy here till you came. Even the breeze has died out."

Saxton got up to go presently and Raridon rose with him. He and Saxton went down the walk together.

"They seem to have struck up an acquaintance," observed Mr. Porter.

"Mr. Saxton is very nice," said Evelyn.

"Oh, he's all right," said her father, easily.

CHAPTER IV.

John Saxton trotted his pony through a broken gate into a great yard that had once been sown in blue grass, and at the center of which lay the crumbled ruins of a fountain. Before he could make his presence known, a frowsy man in corduroy emerged from the great front door and came toward him.

"My name's Saxton, and you must be Snyder."

"Correct," said the man, and they shook hands. "Walk in and help yourself." He led the pony toward the outbuildings, while Saxton viewed the pile before him with interest. He had been making a careful inspection of all the properties that had fallen to his care. This had necessitated a good deal of traveling. He had begun in Colorado and worked eastward, going slowly, and getting the best advice obtainable as to the value of his principals' holdings. Much of their property was practically worthless. Title had been gained under foreclosure to vast areas which had no value. A waterworks plant stood in the prairie where there had once been a Kansas town. The place was depopulated and the smokestack stood as a monument to blighted hopes. Ranch houses were inhabited by squatters, who had not been on his books at all, and who paid no tribute to Boston. He was viewed with suspicion by these tenants, and on inquiry at the county seats, he found that they were lawless men, and that it would be better for him to let them alone. It was patent that they would not pay rent, and to eject them merely in the maintenance of a principle involved useless expense and violence.

"This certainly beats them all," Saxton muttered aloud.

He had reached in his itinerary what his papers called the Poindexter property. He had found that the place was famous throughout this part of the country for the idiosynchasies of its sometime owners, three young men who had come out of the East to show how the cattle business should be managed. They had secured an immense acreage and built a stone ranch house whose curious architecture imparted to the Platte Valley a touch of medievalism that was little appreciated by the neighboring cattlemen. One of the owners, a Philadelphian named Poindexter, who had a weakness for architecture, contributed the buildings and his two associates bought the cattle. There were one thousand acres of rolling pasture here, much of it lying along the river, and a practical man could hardly have failed to succeed; but theft, disease in the herd and inexperience in buying and selling, had wrought the ranchmen's destruction. Before their money was exhausted, Poindexter and his associates lived in considerable state, and entertained the friends who came to see them according to the best usages of Eastern country life within, and their own mild approximation of Western life without. Tom Poindexter's preceptor in architecture, an elderly gentleman with a sense of humor, had found a pleasure which he hardly dared to express in the medieval tone of the house and buildings.

"There's a remnant of the Poindexter herd out there somewhere," Wheaton had said to Sexton. "The fellow Snyder, that I put in as a caretaker, ought to have gathered up the loose cattle by this time; that's what I told him to do when I put him there."

Saxton turned and looked out over the rolling plain. A few rods away lay the river, and where it curved nearest the house stood a group of cottonwoods, like sentinels drawn together for colloquy. Scattered here and there over the plain were straggling herds.

There was much in the place to appeal to Saxton's quiet humor. The house was two stories high and there was a great hall, with an immense fireplace at one end. The sleeping rooms opened on a gallery above the hall. An effort had been made to give the house the appearance of Western wildness by introducing a great abundance of skins of wild beasts —a highly dishonest bit of decorating, for they had been bought in Chicago. Under one wing of the stairway, which divided to left and right at the center of the hall, was the dining room; under the other was the ranch office.

"Those fellows thought a good deal of their stomachs," said Snyder, as Saxton opened and shut the empty drawers of the sideboard.

"I suppose our mortgage covers the sunset, too," Saxton said. Nearly every portable thing of value had been removed, and evidently in haste; but the heavy oak chairs and the table remained. Snyder did his own modest cooking in the kitchen, which was in great disorder. The floor of the office was littered with scraps of paper. The original tenants had evidently made a quick settlement of their business affairs before leaving. Snyder did his own modest cooking in the on the long bench that was built into one side of the room, and a battered valise otherwise marked it as his lodging place. Saxton viewed the room with disgust; it was more like a kennel than a bedroom.

"My ranching wasn't so bad after all," he muttered. "If you have a pony we'll take a ride around the fences."

No More "White Bread!"

"White bread is abolished in the United States," it is stated in telegraphic dispatches, referring to the ruling of the Secretary of Agriculture that millers must not bleach flour. The ruling went into effect this week, but millers have until June 3 to dispose of the bleached flour still in stock. It is declared that there will be as much difference between bread made from unbleached flour as there is between angel cake and sponge cake. The flour will be of a creamy color instead of white, and the bread will be light golden in color. But there will be no difference in flavor, and the bread will have an additional quality to commend itself to the consumer, because it will be just like that "mother used to make," in the good old days before the craze for bleached flour came into vogue.—Rochester Democrat.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Actual improvement and the general trend of business affairs now confirm the hopeful return of better times. Some increase in trading defaults is due to a special cause and lacks significance in view of the sustained high aggregate of solvent payments through the banks. Weather conditions favor enterprise in both industrial and agricultural operations, and the promise improves for larger crops and increasing outputs of the manufactures.

Notable demands appear in the iron working branches, large tonnage being closed for pig iron, rails, structural steel and wire, while there is gratifying revival in the bookings of railway equipment, power, machinery and minor metals.

Idle capacity is seen to be undergoing further reduction in various branches, and more hands find steady work at the car shops and factories. The mills and forges in the Calumet district appear almost as busy as ever, new structures and production make rapid gains at Gary and large additions to the Pullman works are planned.

New enterprise is noted in the plans for additions to factories and mercantile structures, which again occupy attention, and estimating departments figure more actively upon track extension, elevation and bridges. Contemplated local betterments involve the use of enormous quantities of steel shapes, quarry products and timber, while the building trades are now settled into a remarkably prosperous season.

Movements of general merchandise, breadstuffs and live stock show the moderate decline incident to this period, but offerings of other freight rise in factory faterials, raw supplies and needs of the farms.

Bank clearings, $264,742,053 exceed those of corresponding week in 1908 by 18.1 per cent and compare with $267,754,845 in 1907. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 36, against 30 last week, 24 in 1908 and 26 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4, against 7 last week, 7 in 1908 and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Review of Chicago Trade.

NEW YORK.

Irregularity still characterizes the trade, crop and industrial situation. In industrial lines the consensus of reports is that further improvement has been registered, especially in the iron and steel, coal, coke, woolen manufacturing and leather trades. Building is active and lines of trade catering to this industry are feeling beneficial effects.

It is a between-season period in wholesale and jobbing distributive trade; orders from retailers are merely of a filling-in character and hardly equal to expectations. The tone of opinion as to the outlook for fall trade is as a whole rather more optimistic, but the evidences of repression in trade, whether due to tariff and crop uncertainty, reduced purchasing power of the public or high prices for foodstuffs, are too evident to be ignored.

Manufacturers of woolen goods are buying freely of raw material at Boston, and sales of new domestic clip wool to arrive have aggregated 10,000 pounds. London sale prices are reported to have been advanced, and this is reflected in large dealings in foreign wool.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with May 13 were 224, against 214 last week, 281 in the like week of 1908, 184 in 1907, 161 in 1906 and 191 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week number 31, against 29 last week and 22 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

TORNADOES IN THREE STATES.

Town Devastated and a Train Wrecked by Kansas Cyclone.

A series of tornadoes in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma late Friday killed at least five persons, injured fifty-five, devastated one town, wrecked a train, and did great damage to property. The storm spread over a wide area and laid to waste many farmhouses. On account of a great portion of the damage being done on farms, its full extent could not be learned at once. Many conflicting reports have been received. One said ten were killed. A blinding rain and hail storm accompanied the wind in all three States. Many washouts demoralized railroad traffic.

Twenty-five were injured by a storm that swept over Mount Washington and Fairmount Park, suburbs of Kansas City. At least two of these are thought to be fatally injured and others seriously. The town of Hollis, near Concordia, was swept away. Three were killed there and ten seriously injured. The Eckstrom family, consisting of five persons, is missing. Their house is in ruins and it is thought they are dead.

Near Great Bend a tornado killed two and injured twenty. All wires are down in that vicinity and it is feared that the death list may be greater. William Ackerly, a Santa Fe engineer, was killed while working with a bridge gang between Great Bend and Kinsley. Frank Nicholson, a conductor, was killed. The tornado wrecked the work train of which Ackerly was engineer and blew it into a ditch. Several members of the crew were blown 100 feet. The pile driver toppled over, crushing Ackerly to death in his cab, where he had remained, with his hand upon the throttle.

At Holsington, Kan., a tornado injured a number and greatly damaged farm property. It was not so severe, however, as that passing over other portions of the State. At Pond Creek, Okla., a severe wind storm injured four and unroofed several houses.

CHICAGO "L" WRECK HURTS 23.

Man Running Express Held Guilty of Carlessness by Road President.

Following a collision of two Northwestern elevated trains in Chicago Tuesday morning, in which twenty-three passengers were injured, rigid investigation to learn the cause of the wreck was begun by city officials. The collision, which occurred at North Franklin and Ohio streets, was attributed by President Mason B. Starring to "gross carelessness" on the part of A. Winterberger, the motorman in charge of a Wilson avenue express train, which, on a straight track, ran into the rear end of a Ravenswood local. Both trains were city bound.

The motorman's explanation that the brake refused to work was disputed by Mr. Starring and by Millard B. Hereley, city traction expert. The latter declared the car was inspected less than ten days ago and found to be in perfect condition. Both trains were jammed to the doors with pasengers on their way to work in the loop district. Among those most seriously injured was William C. Schroeder, cashier of the Continental National Bank, who suffered fractures of both legs and cuts about the head and body. In addition to those injured many passengers on both trains were shaken up and the women became panic-stricken. Firemen rescued many persons bewildered and imperiled by the third rail by carrying them down ladders to the ground.

The accident occurred shortly before 8:30 o'clock. The rear vestibule of the last car of the Ravenswood train was partly demolished and the front of the motor car of the express train was wrecked. President Starring and other officials of the road supervised the work of rescue and the clearing away of the wreckage.

TWENTY BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Victims Hurled High in Air by Blast in Quarry.

At least twenty men were killed Wednesday by a premature blast of dynamite in a stone quarry operated by the Callanan Road Improvement Company near South Bethlehem, eleven miles southwest of Albany, N. Y. Twelve Italian workmen are among the victims. One thousand pounds of dynamite exploded, and the bodies of the victims were hurled hundreds of feet by the concussion and so badly mutilated as to be almost beyond recognition. As darkness was falling a wagon drew up to the engine house loaded with bodies that had been picked up back on the quarry hill. A crowd of grief-stricken relatives gathered around eager to identify the dead, only to turn away at the sickening sight. Italians with shovels found here and there portions of bodies and brought their grewsome loads in boxes to the engine house, which served as a temporary morgue.

Seven Hurt in Explosion on Boat.

Seven men were injured, four of whom may die, as the result of the explosion of a boiler on the steamer James H. Hoyt, three miles off shore, on Lake Erie. The boat, which is owned by J. W. Westcott, of Detroit, was on its way from Cleveland to Ashtabula.

CHARGED WITH WHIPPING GIRL

Superintendent of Orphan Home at Indianapolis Is Under Arrest.

Henry Roesener, superintendent of the German Protestant Orphans' Home in Indianapolis, was arrested on the charge of whipping Bessie Sturgeon 15 years old, an inmate of the home. The arrest was the result of action by the executive committee of the Indianapolis Humane Society. It is alleged that Roesner whipped the girl with a sewing machine belt because she protested against assisting in washing dishes. The case recently came to the attention of the police department and the humane society and it was proposed to the directors of the orphanage that no affidavit would be made if Roesner resigned or was dismissed. The directors, however, decided to await the action of the court. Roesener was released on $40 cash bond.

FOE OF KNOX IN JAIL CELL.

Indiana Attorney Taken After Long Hunt by Girl's Father.

Charles W. Caldwell, an attorney, who lately gained some notoriety by attempting to file in the courts of the District of Columbia a suit to oust Philander C. Knox from the office of Secretary of State in President Taft's cabinet, was arrested in his office in Columbus after an all-night chase. Men with dogs and guns, led by A. M. Remy of Elizabethtown, who allege that Caldwell has been secretly visiting his 16-year-old daughter, made the capture. Caldwell is 40 years old. His wife recently filed suit against him for divorce. In court Caldwell was put under bond of $300 as surety of peace. He was unable to give the bond and was sent back to jail.

BIG BELL FALLS; MANY ESCAPE.

Crashes Through Roof While Ringing Out Student Baseball Victory.

A bell weighing 500 pounds, which had hung in the tower of Butler College, Indianapolis, since 1874, was jarred from its rusty fastenings while it was being rung in celebration of the defeat of Depauw University's baseball team and crashed through the roof of the building into the chapel, 100 feet below. A group of students working at the bell rope just missed being crushed and the chapel was filled with debris. The night before the chapel was crowded for an entertainment, in the course of which the bell was rung, and had it fallen then many would have been killed.

The headquarters of the Church Extension Society is in Chicago, where the car began its tour.

Another instance of the revival of commercial China is shown by the information of a Chinese steamboat company, for the navigation of the upper Yang-tse. That company, managed exclusively by mandarins and native merchants, will enjoy the monopoly of the navigation of the river for twenty-five years.

The management of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad has ceased the practice of suspending operating employes for infractions of rules on the ground that such punishment is an effectual means of discipline. Instead, the company has instituted a comprehensive system of records which are at all times accessible to the men, and from which promotions and dismissals from the service will be made.

The medical department of the army will this year and for the first time, put into use field hospitals with the most modern and improved equipment. They will be used in connection with militia encampments at San Francisco, Sparta, Wis., and Antietam, Md. Officers of the army medical department will deliver lectures at the encampments on sanitation, medical field work, etc., for the benefit of the medical officers of militia, and exhibits of field sanitary apparatus will be used in connection with the lectures.

The formal opening of the Maryland Tuberculosis Sanatorium, in the Blue Ridge Mountains, is described as a notable "victory of peace", in that it marks the birth of a hope that science, aided by humane sentiment, will ultimately extinguish the white plague. Maryland has not only the distinction of being the first to demonstrate the possibility of preventing and curing consumption, but she is among the first to appropriate large sums of money to put accepted medical ideas into practice.

The problem of making both ends meet in the administration of government affairs seems to have been taken up in earnest by the executive branch. Heretofore it seems not to have concerned these officials over much and the duty of making the annual expenditure approximate the annual income has been left entirely to the House of Representatives. Secretary McVeagh's remark recently, while on a visit in New York City, that the United States would soon have a budget system in force similar to that of most European countries, and President Taft's recent orders for retrenchment, wherever possible, in the various executive departments, indicate that the administration is working out plans for the solution of the mighty financial problem along business-like lines.

Nervous Prostration

"I suffered so with Nervous Prostration that I thought there was no use trying to get well. A friend recommended Dr. Miles' Nervine, and although skeptical at first, I soon found myself recovering, and am to-day well."

MRS. D. I. JONES,
5806 Broadway, Cleveland, O.

Much sickness is of nervous origin. It's the nerves that make the heart force the blood through the veins, the lungs take in oxygen, the stomach digest food, the liver secrete bile and the kidneys filter the blood. If any of these organs are weak, it is the fault of the nerves through which they get their strength. Dr. Miles' Nervine is a specific for the nerves. It soothes the irritation and assists in the generation of nerve force. Therefore you can hardly miss it if you take Dr. Miles' Nervine when sick. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The Tariff Question

One of the most interesting features of the tariff debate in both houses of congress during the progress of the present tariff revision bill has been that part of the discussion which relates to the question whether under any circumstances the framers of the proposed tariff law are justified in increasing the rates of duty imposed upon given articles of foreign importation, for the avowed purpose of giving encouragement to domestic industries. The two sides of the proposition have been represented on the one hand by those who insist that the recent elections resulted in a mandate from the people demanding a reduction of duties, and on the other hand, the claim that the platform of the republican party made a distinct avowal not in favor of a reduction of duties, but for a thorough revision of the tariff upon protection lines, which is interpreted to mean such reductions or increases or retention of existing duties as shall be required to carry out the spirit of the platform in favor of equalizing conditions of production in this country and in foreign countries, with a reasonable profit to the domestic manufacturer.

This whole issue turns on the question whether the tariff revision bill in its present form meets the requirements of the people. In very many instances the bill makes substantial reductions in duties. In most instances the existing rates of duty are retained, and in comparatively few instances increases of duties are made, with the avowed purpose of giving additional protection to domestic industries that are shown to be threatened by serious foreign competition.

The question which have most interested the public in relation to the proposed advance of duties in some of the schedules above the Dingley law rates cover certain classes of knit goods, chiefly hosiery, and some lines of gloves composed of different grades of leather, chiefly women's gloves. When the bill passed the house of representatives, it contained increases of duties on most of the articles of this description. A tremendous protest was put up over the country, augmented in large part by wholesale and retail dealers as well as the importers of these classes of goods, to the effect that the advances in duties would cause large additions to the retail prices, and thus place added burdens upon the domestic buyers of these goods. Not only in the case of hosiery and gloves, but in many of the highly finished articles in iron and steel, woolen and cotton goods, china and glassware, are the duties increased by the present revision bill above the rates of the Dingley law, for the avowed purpose of giving additional protection to the larger measure of labor involved in the fabricating of these commodities.

The chief burden of complaint by those who have entered protests against these increases of duties has been, it is alleged, based upon a gross misrepresentation of what the precise results of the increases in duties would be. Where the increases in duties in the case of hosiery, for example, amounts to an average of from one and ¾ cents to two and one-half cents on a pair, the allegation has been made by the importers, the wholesalers and the retailers, that in consequence of the increase in duties, prices would go up 25 or 50 cents a pair as the case may be. The average increases in duties are from 15 to 20 per cent over existing rates, which amount to about 50 cents per dozen pairs of hose, so that the citizen who desires to know the facts has only to make a short mathematical calculation to demonstrate the impossibility of so slight an increase of duties producing a ten-fold greater increase in retail prices.

The framers of the tariff revision bill justify the occasional increases in duties upon the experience of the republican party in tariff legislation during all recent years, when the fixing of duties upon adequately protective lines has had the effect not only to transfer the manufacturing of the goods in question to the fields of the United States, but in every instance bringing about substantial reductions in prices, through the improved processes of production which American ingenuity invariably applies in the economics of industry. Many are the illustrations employed by the supporters of this policy as ample justifications for employing protective duties in the interests of American working people and the capital employed in American industries. The case is cited of the imposition of duties to the amount of two cents per pound on tin plate in the tariff act of 1890, which transferred the tin plate manufacture of the United Kingdom to the United States, and changed importations of millions of pounds of tin plate which goes into the canning and tinware business of this country to a domestic production which now amounts to more than $35,000,000 worth. The prices of tin plate have steadily declined, until the difference in the foreign and domestic price does not average more than half of the duties now maintained. The rates of duty have been reduced to 1¼ cents a pound, and the pending bill reduces them to 1.2 cents a pound. Another illustration is the production of saccharine. When duties were first imposed upon this article, the import price was $5 a pound. Under the stimulation of the protective rates, the domestic industry was established, and the price to the American consumer has been reduced to 75 cents a pound.

It is claimed that precisely these results will be secured in the hosiery industry of the United States if adequately protective duties adding a fraction to the cost of gloves imported in order to make up the difference in the foreign cost and the domestic cost. That this idea is not novel or new has been shown by the illustrations in other industries, and the principle is carried throughout many schedules of the pending bill. One example which is directly in point is the increase in duties on finished cutlery. These duties are applied to invoice of imported cutlery where the parts of such cutlery are imported seperately but in the same invoice, with certain of the parts not wholly completed, but requiring only nominal amount of labor to assemble the parts and complete the article. The framers of the tariff bill have sought to minimize this injustice to domestic industries, and what amounts also to a fraud upon the public revenues. Foreign importations are assessed duties for revenue purposes. The importer adopts every conceivable advice to evade payment of duties.

Much attention has been given by the framers of the tariff bill to the principles involved in the duties intended to be imposed for revenue and protection purposes in the schedule covering hosiery. It has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of most of the committeemen that a slight advance in duties, amounting to less than 20 per cent in most cases, will rapidly develop the domestic industry, which now extends through 35 states, employes more than 50,000 working men and women, and involves millions of dollars of invested capital and annual wage payments.

It is believed by the strong friends of the protective policy in congress that the case of hosiery, like others that have been cited in the pending bill, are justified upon the basis of protection, just as have protective duties in the law and in former tariffs justified themselves in the results produced through developed industries, added wages to American working men, and reduced prices to American consumers.

Orchard and Garden.

Make three successional plantings of sweet corn this month, at ten-day intervals.

Never pick berries for market when they are wet. And, when picked, hurry them to a cool place out of the sun.

Cut off, at any time, any suckers you may find growing at the foot of fruit trees or on the trunk or main limbs where branches should not grow.

Muzzle the horses and pad the outside portions of whiffletrees and harrow when cultivating the orchard; thus avoiding all bruised and "barked" trees.

Pay an occasional friendly visit to the little trees set this spring. Rub off unnecessary sprouts; and make sure that no label wires have been left on the trees to choke them.

Watch for the little slugs—darkish, slimy fellows—that are likely to be on pear or cherry leaves now. Fine, dry dust, if thrown in the trees, will kill every slug it covers. Or almost any of the regulation orchard sprays will exterminate this pest.

One ounce of California buhach dissolved in three gallons of water is a good, non-poisonous spray application for cabbage worms and lice. The imported "Persian insect powder" is the same thing, but is not so fresh and effective as the California article.

Cabbage and other plants can be protected from cutworms by erecting a two-inch high paper fence around each stem. Lap the paper ends and push the "fence" an inch into the soil to hold it in place. The paper should not come nearer to the stem than about one and one-half inches.

Keep hoes sharp with a file.

The asparagus beetle is a troublesome pest, not easy to control, says Rural New Yorker. Chickens are fond of them and will rid garden beds of the adults, but, of course, can be of little benefit in large fields. Clean cutting, especially in ridge culture, keeps them well under control in spring, but the slugs or larvae do considerable harm later.

The physician was called and found that it was necessary to remove him to the hospital immediately where he is now located. The last reports from him was that he was in a very dangerous condition.

London Subway Wages.

Under the new scale the London Subway District railway will pay its employees as follows: Motormen will be paid from 35s. to 42s. 6d., conductors from 25s. to 30s. and gatemen from 21s. to 22s. 6d. The week is to consist of six days of ten hours each instead of seven days, as at present.

The men ask that 8d., 9d. and 10d. per hour shall be paid to first, second and third year motormen, with 10½d. for leading men of this class; 5½d. and 6d. per hour to conductors and assistant motormen, and 4½d. and 5d. per hour to the first and second year gatemen respectively. They also propose a nine hour day and an eight hour day in reckoning overtime and that for Sunday work the rate of payment shall be half as much again as the ordinary rate.

Clever With Her Hands.

To write and even to sew by means of the lips and tongue alone would seem a sheer impossibility, and yet Dr. Rubinstein of Wertheim-de-Main, a medical expert of reputation in Germany, according to the London Globe, vouches for having himself seen an authentic instance. The case was that of a young girl, paralyzed in all her limbs from the age of seven to fourteen, when she died. This afflicted little creature, by a triumph of will and patience that which, in its own way, few finger achievements have been recorded, trained lips and tongue to do the work of the hand, and to do it well, for she could not only sew, but could do it with neatness and speed, even arranging pieces of light straw in their places by the same means. In three weeks she embroidered designs in silk on a piece of canvas some yards long.

Crimes at the Paris Halles.

The position of crier at the Paris halles, or central markets, is one which, in view of recent revelations in a case before the law courts, ought not to be despised. The most wretchly Gallinis fowls for sale earn 400f a month. Those who sell Brittany fowls get 41f a month, and those who dispose of ducks only receive 21f per month. Rabbits being the crier only a pittance, for 40 a month is all he gets. Not everybody can be a crier, for unless you have sound vocal chords and a passable voice you will not be engaged. It also requires a man with a strong constitution, for the crier is at work from 6 o'clock in the morning till 3 o'clock in the evening, and on an average he should sell 2,000 fowls per hour.—London Globe.

CONSTIPATION MUNYON'S PAW-PAW PILLS

Munyon's Paw-Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They coax the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour; they do not gripe; they do not weaken; but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. In my opinion constipation is responsible for most ailments. There are thirty-two feet of human bowels, which is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged, the whole system becomes poisoned, causing biliousness, indigestion and impure blood, which often produces rheumatism and kidney ailments. No woman who suffers with constipation or any liver complaint can expect to have a clear complexion, or enjoy good health.

Munyon's Paw-Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weakening; they enrich the blood instead of impoverishing it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no dope, they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic. Price 25 cents.

Possible Danger.

Indians Good Farmers.

The Indians of the great Canadian prairie province of Saskatchewan are disproving the theory that an Indian won't work unless he has to. They are becoming industrious and prosperous.

There are nearly 8,000 Indians in the province and last year they had about 9,000 acres under crops. They raised 150,572 bushels of grain and roots and 36,000 tons of hay, worth $136,023.

The department of Indian affairs reports that the Indians are turning more and more to the soil for a living. The agent of the Assiniboine agency, which may be regarded as typical, writes:

"I was greatly pleased to find that the area under crop was almost double what it was the year before. The band had about 600 acres of wheat and 200 acres of oats. The Indians of this agency are beginning to farm on a large scale, and if they continue to do as well as they have in the last two years there will be some good-sized farmers among them. One man had 153 acres in crop and another 123 acres and several had seventy acres each. There was a decided improvement in the way the land had been farmed."

A Paradox.

When it is known that this country consumes as much as 7,000,000,000 pounds of sugar in a year, one wonders why there are not more sweet tempered ones than there are.

THINK HARD.

It Pays to Think About Food.

The unthinking life some people lead often causes trouble and sickness as illustrated in the experience of a lady in Fond du Lac, Wis.

"About four years ago I suffered dreadfully from indigestion, always having eaten whatever I liked, not thinking of the digestible qualities. This indigestion caused palpitation of the heart so badly I could not walk up a flight of stairs without sitting down once or twice to regain breath and strength.

"I became alarmed and tried dieting, wore my clothes very loose, and many other remedies, but found no relief.

"Hearing of the virtues of Grape Nuts and Postum, I commenced using them in place of my usual breakfast of coffee, cakes, or hot biscuit, and in one week's time I was relieved of sour stomach and other ills attending indigestion. In a month's time my heart was performing its functions naturally and I could climb stairs and hills and walk long distances.

"I gained ten pounds in this short time, and my skin became clear and I completely regained my health and strength. I continue to use Grape-Nuts and Postum for I feel that I owe my good health entirely to their use. 'There's a Reason.'

"I like the delicious flavor of Grape Nuts and by making Postum according to directions, it tastes similar to milk high grade coffee."

THE SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

A monument for the soldiers!
And what will ye build it of?
Can ye build it of marble, or brass, or bronze,
Outlasting the soldier's love?
Can ye glorify it with legends
As grand as their blood hath writ,
From the inmost shrine of this land of thine
To the uttermost verge of it?

And the answer came: We would build it
Out of our hopes made sure,
And out of our purest prayers and tears,
And out of our faith secure;
We would build it out of the great white truths
Their death hath sanctified,
And the sculptured forms of the men in arms,
And their faces ere they died.

And what heroic figures
Can the sculptor carve in stone?
Can the marble breast be made to bleed
And the marble lips to moan?
Can the marble brow be fevered?
And the marble eyes be graved
To look their last as the flag floats past
On the country they have saved?

And the answer came: The figures
Shall all be fair and brave,
And, as befitting, as pure and white
As the stars above their grave!
The marble lips and breast and brow
Whereon the laurel lies,
Bequeath us right to guard the flight
Of the old flag in the skies.

A monument for the soldiers!
Built of a people's love,
And blazoned and decked and panoplied
With the hearts ye built it of!
And see that ye build it stately,
In pillar and niche and gate,
And high in pose as the souls of those
It would commemorate!
—James Whitcomb Riley.

HOW THE RAIDER ESCAPED.

IN the fall of 1864 the northern part of Virginia was in a great deal of excitement, for the raids of the Confederates had greatly annoyed the generals of the Union forces. At last the Federal commanders determined to exterminate the rangers, and, with that end in view, sent out a picked force of mounted men, eager to meet and capture an enemy who boasted that he could not be taken. It was early in the morning of a warm September day when the men in blue found their quarry, coming on them suddenly at the foot of a hill.

For a moment there was a brisk rain of bullets. Several of the men on both sides threw up their arms and fell in the dust, while their foaming, riderless steeds dashed madly down the pike. Then the Confederates broke and fled, with the yelling Yankees close at their heels.

At last a stream was reached and here the Union men succeeded in capturing several Confederates, but not the leader. He was a small, wiry man, with a frame as strong and tough as steel, one who did not know what fear or defeat meant, and he plunged his animal into the water, lifted his sword high above his head and safely climbed up the opposite bank amid a shower of bullets, accompanied by a shout of admiration from the astonished enemy. In a moment he was out of sight behind the hills.

About a quarter of a mile down the road was a farmhouse, in the sitting room of which a girl sat peeling fruit. The door was open, and just as the girl raised her eyes a horse raced into the yard with its flanks reeking with water and the rider wet from the tip of his plumed hat to the soles of his cavalry boots.

The man rode into the barnyard and left his steed in the stall, then ran into the house. At that moment the head of the Federal column came over the hill on the gallop. The Confederate saw the line of blue uniforms, the sun flashing on the sabers, and with a hurried glance around he sprang to his feet and ran to the corner, in which stood an old "grandfather's clock." In a moment he had opened the door and slipped inside, and by the time he had closed it again the Union men were trooping into the house.

They began a thorough search of the house from garret to cellar, but not a trace of the man could they find. The beds were torn to bits, the pantries explored, every closet upset and no nook or corner of the place left uninvestigated, but to no purpose. Then the barn was given a good overhauling, and, though they found the wet and saddled horse, there was no trace of the rider. At last all the Union men collected in the sitting room where the young lady sat quietly watching the proceedings and still busy in her household duties of perparing the fruit. They were nonplused and could not imagine what had become of the fugitive.

Now, it happened that the old clock was not running, but had been broken for some time, and was full of dust, which the entrance of the ranger had disturbed. In fact, he was in a great predicament. The dust had filled his nostrils and he felt creep over him the horrible sensation of a coming sneeze. A sneeze meant capture, perhaps death, but the sneeze had to come.

A bright thought flashed into the Confederate's mind, and with a quick motion of his hand he set the old wheels in a whirl and the rusty gong sounded a sonorous chime. In the cover of the noise the sneeze was born, but it was not heard. However, the sudden waking of the old clock excited suspicions, and, with a glance of inquiry, the Federal officer moved toward it. The girl was quick to take in the situation. With a fretful air she exclaimed:

"There goes that old clock again. It must really be fixed, for it is so annoying." And the officer, changing his mind, took no more notice of the occurrence. In a few moments the house was deserted and the troops had passed away in the direction of their camps, leaving the rebel to come out from his hiding place a sight to behold. The wet clothes were full of dust and his face gray with the water and mud which covered it, but he was a very happy man. In an hour he was back among his remaining troops.—Kansas City Journal.

"Under the Roses the Blue, Under the Lillies the Gray."

Lincoln and Grant.

"The first time it was my pleasure to meet Lincoln," General Horace Porter said, "he had summoned Grant to Washington to place him in command of the armies of the entire republic. Grant came into the room late, jostled by persons who thought themselves of great importance. Lincoln spied him at once, and, turning to Mrs. Lincoln, he exclaimed: 'There he is now. My dear, this is the man who is to end all our troubles.' They were a strange picture as they stood there side by side, Lincoln and Grant, the latter short of stature, his head bowed and in dusty garments, Lincoln towering above him, his great right hand clasping that of General Grant, talking to him as a father might to his son."

Not All Gone.

A Confederate soldier whose command had run two days from Nashville had thrown away his gun and accouterments and, alone in the woods, sat down and commenced thinking, the first chance he had had to do such a thing. Rolling up his sleeves and looking at his arms and general physique, he thus gave vent to his feelings: "I am whipped, badly whipped and somewhat demoralized, but no one can say I am scattered."

THE GRAND ARMY.

We ain't a stand in' army now
In fact, we're gray and lame,
A trifle stiff about the knees
And shakin' in our aim.

It's us that knew the bitter days;
It's us that went to die.
I guess we got a right to shout
When Glory
flutters by.

We're gettin' scarce; but, bless yer heart,
If country called for men
We'd sign the roll "age twenty-one,"
And save that flag again!
—Wallace Irwin in Collier's Weekly.

Detailed for Baptism.

During the Civil War the late Colonel Gabe Bouck organized a regiment, which he controlled as a dictator. It was while the army was resting after Colonel Gabe's first campaign that an itinerant evangelist wandered into camp and, approaching the colonel, asked if he was the commanding officer.

"Ugh!" snorted "Old Gabe," as he was affectionately called. "What do you want?"

"I am a humble servant of the Lord endeavoring to save the souls of the unfortunate. I have just left the camp of the ——th Massachusetts, where I was instrumental in leading eight men into paths of righteousness."

"Adjutant," thundered Colonel Bouck after a moment's pause, "detail ten men for baptism! No Massachusetts regiment shall beat mine for piety!"—Everybody's.

Sat on a Barrel of Powder.

Among the many medals awarded by the navy department for acts of bravery during the civil war was one given to John Davis, who was on the United States steamer Valley City in the attack on the enemy's vessels and a fort near Elizabeth City, N. C., Feb. 10, 1862. When the vessel was on fire near the magazine he seated himself on an open barrel of powder as the only means to keep the fire out.

A Conscript Father.

J. M. Learned of Oxfordville, N. H., had three twins in the Union army. Two were in the Fourteenth Massachusetts. The third, whose twin was a girl, was in the Fifth New Hampshire.

LINCOLN'S SPEECH AT GETTYSBURG.

Four-score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We are met to dedicate a portion of it as the final resting-place of those who here gave their lives that the nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow, this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to the cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that the dead shall not have died in vain, that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—MRS. EMMA IMSE, 833 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

AN ENNOBLING VIEW OF LIFE.

By Rev. J. W. Roberts.

Lift up your eyes on high.—Isaiah 11: 26.

In days when men are looking into earthly things with eager and penetrating vision, these words come to us with special force and meaning.

The man who always looks down cannot aspire. There is a purpose in our noble aspirations. The unattained beckons us onward. To look up means to lift up. "'Tis not what man does which exalts him," says Browning, "but what man would do." Our standard will rise higher and higher as we go from strength to strength. Our longings foretell our destiny.

We must look down at times to get a clear idea of life's details, but if we wish to see their proper relation to the great issues of life we must look up. If we simply look at our feet, how limited becomes our vision! By lifting up our eyes on high, we see the vast arch that spans the heavens. It is then we see with Emerson "what majestic beauties daily wrap us in their bosom," or with Ruskin study "the mystery of distant mountain blue," hear with Tennyson the sea waves break upon "the cold gray stones," or stand entranced with Newton until the stars rise.

Isaiah calls men to look at the stars because man's vision broadens as it lengthens. This wider view enables us to understand the ways of God and the proper relation of the lesser to the greater issues of life. Here we find inspiration for our noblest endeavors. This upward and outward vision will often explain the mystery of trouble and the great perplexities of life. It does not require a large object to hide the wide landscape from our view if we stand close enough to it. To understand the things of to-day we must get a right view of them. We see them best from above. Paul saw them from the proper perspective when he said: "All things work together for good to them that love God."

How it ennobles our work when we realize that it is part of the great plan of God! By bringing our loftiest visions to bear upon the practical things of life, we learn to do our best work and bring forth evidences of the divinity within us. Our work will not be merely for time, but for eternity. In that way we may become one of the "immortals."

The great Hebrew poet's sublime conception of man shall yet be realized: "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands." By lifting up our eyes on high we shall better understand both men and God and learn to appreciate more fully life here and life hereafter.

SCIENCE AND FAITH.

By Henry E. Cope.

"In your faith supply virtue and in your virtue knowledge."—II. Peter 1:5.

Is it true that the greater the knowledge the less the religious interest? Are these two persons, the man whose zeal for religion is equaled by his bigotry and ignorance, and the other in whom scientific study has dwarfed spiritual sensibility, fair types by which to judge the relatians of religion and knowledge?

Is intelligence incompatiblo with real piety? Will the growth of knowledge bring about the dissolution of religion? Is the life of religious aspirations and feelings out of date in a scientific age such as we are constantly reminded that this one is to-day? Science has overcome superstition; is faith so bound up with superatition that it, too, must go?

With honest people the inquiry is so important that they can afford to neglect the somewhat large number of persons who use a thin smattering of knowledge and a superficial acquaintance with science as an excuse for divorce from all moral obligations, just as it also permits one or ignore those who continue to confound faith with willful blindness.

We can be sure of one thing, at least; that, no matter what our feelings, theories, or ideals may be, we cannot turn our backs on the great world of fact as it is laid before us. The faith that fights facts is committing suicide. Appeals to our fears cannot to-day make the facts less real to us, and we know that by them we will have to stand or fall.

If you stop to think about it, there is a striking significance in the fact that this question has arisen. Is there a religion for the intelligent, educated, scientific mind? It suggests another question: Can any other mind fully comprehend the riches and meaning of religion? The unthinking cling to customs, traditions and forms that are the vestiges of truth. The trained mind distinguishes between the garments of truth and truth itself.

Every life will have its religion according to its development. It is folly to look for uniformity in faith until you have uniformity in the faithful, until all minds are alike the things these minds can see must vary. The religion of the man who thinks in the terms of the laws of a universe must be different from that of the one who cannot think beyond his dinner pail or his back yard.

If religion is the life of ideals, the power within us that pushes out and on toward the realization in ourselves and our conditions of the best we know and hope for, then each man's faith will be determined by his vision and his knowledge; every individual creed will be conditioned by the individual's stage of culture.

It is folly for the trained mind to seek satisfaction in the ideals whose bounds are set by the untrained mind, just as it equally is foolish for him to mock at the vision that cheers the lowlier life. Nearly all the supposed difficulties between science and religion arise from the attempt to force to a common viewpoint in religious minds that dwell almost a whole universe apart in all the rest of their thinking.

The avenues to the Most High are many. There is a way somewhere from every life and never precisely the same way for any two lives. The way begins at just the level on which the life is found. Because religion is the way from our present selves to that ideal and complete social self in every life the religion depends, after all, on the self.

Knowledge does not lead away from faith; it leads into its fuller light. One's faith is not a set of formal statements, unchangeable and subject to be shattered by the verification of new facts. It is a spirit in life, a habit and trend of the spirit which leads the life forward through every realm of fact. It is not an outer garment; it is an inner spirit which guides onward, though the developing life may cast aside its outgrown garments.

Science is our reading of the relations of the facts of life; religion is the confidence and longing that reads all in the light of life's enlarging ends and increasing values. Your religion cannot be tested by the facts of science; it is tested by its value as a force in your life. A worthy faith fears no knowledge; it rejoices in all that enriches and enlarges life. It welcomes science as the servant of the growing soul.

SERMONETTES.

Dividing with love is always doubling.

All great facts are due to some great faith.

Tact without love is only a form of diplomacy.

Men who give up nothing give up everything.

It is better to blurt out the truth than to set a lie to soft music.

There is no blessing to any bread until it is broken and shared.

Only the doctrines that make deeds are worth working over.

The man who lies down on you never has any standing at all.

Too many think their hearts are uplifted because their heads feel light.

The most desolate lives are those that are lived for life's furniture only.

Preaching dietetics is always the forte of those who are out of bread.

The child who gives all gives more than the richest who gives only a part.

People soon know it when the man who lifts up his lips lets his life run down.

It's better being a hand car on the right road than a private one on the wrong.

A good many of the bruises on our hearts come from climbing over conscience.

The pessimist usually thinks he is a literary character because he weeps ink.

It is wonderful how sure you can be as to the facts if you will keep one eye shut.

Many a man feels that his indorsement of a religion gives it its preeminence.

When a man really gets a truth he ceases to be afraid either of hell or of heaven.

People who blame Providence for their crops are usually reticent as to their sowing.

Most of the burdens for which we blame heaven are simply our own needless baggage.

The best argument against the devil is the one that eats into the profits of his business.

It were better to suffer from eternal justice than to enjoy unending bliss on a crooked deal.

The wisdom of the world has always come from the people who did not fear being called fools.

Putting the divine names in caps and man in nonpareil does not make the world any better.

They who think there is only one road to heaven usually want to put a toll gate at their station.

There's nothing of heaven in your religion unless it lights up your home with joy and love.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't forget that no man knows truth who wants to patent it.

Don't fail to be faithful to truth if you would be a follower of it.

Don't try to fill the harvester's wagon until you have first emptied the sower's bag.

Don't overlook the fact that the baggage car does not go through on the heavenly train.

Don't forget that whatever is given by the hand is more than gained by the heart.

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. J. A. Boarman, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria is a splendid remedy for children, known the world over. I use it in my practice and have no hesitancy in recommending it for the complaints of infants and children."

Dr. J. J. Mackey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I consider your Castoria an excellent preparation for children, being composed of reliable medicines and pleasant to the taste. A good remedy for all disturbances of the digestive organs."

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, 77 MURRAY STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

Only an Incident.

Fiercely blew the gale over the city. There was a momentary lull in the tempest, and then it burst forth again with redoubled violence, accompanied by sharp, explosive sounds and appalling crashes.

"In heaven's name," exclaimed the terrified newcomer in the North Side apartment house, "what is that?"

The experienced flat dweller listened a moment.

"That?" he said, with a yawn; "it's the wind upsetting the garbage cans."—Chicago Tribune.

Does This Mean You?

Do you know that the pleasant herb tea, Lane's Family Medicine, will remove all these troubles almost immediately? Innocent.

"Clifford," asked the teacher, "who wrote the Junius letters?"

"I—I don't know, ma'am," answered the terrified little boy. "I didn't!"

There is no need to suffer with soreness and stiffness of joints and muscles. A little Hamlins Wizard Oil rubbed in will limber them up immediately.

Bonnet Rehearsals.

"The tenor in our choir made a ridiculous, but not wholly impractical, suggestion at rehearsal last week," remarked a fair soprano to her chum as they stood in front of a millinery window. "You know our choir is small and we haven't risen to the dignity of vestments yet—our church up there is so young—and we are arranging for some extra rehearsals before Easter to whip the music into shape. After we had set the evenings, he suggested that we have a dress rehearsal so that the boys could get used to our new Easter bonnets and not have their attention taken from the anthem. We laughed, but after all, it wasn't so bad, considering the monstrosities some of the hats are this spring."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

It Didn't Work.

In the outer room of a Wall street office this sign was posted a few days ago: "Please do not whistle; we do all that ourselves." The messenger boys on service in the building evidently saw a funny side to the notice, for within an hour more than 20 of them asked: "When do you whistle?" "When does the concert begin?" "How much for a ticket?" and similar queries. The sign came down after two days, and the manager of the office has had it replaced by one bearing in aggressively bold letters simply the words, "Don't whistle."

These lands are in the grain-raising area, where mixed farming is also carried on with unqualified success.

A railway will shortly be built to Hudson Bay, bringing the world's markets a thousand miles nearer these wheat fields, where schools and churches are convenient, climate excellent, railways close to all settlements and local markets good.

A motorcycle and its rider had an argument near the Engle crossing Saturday evening in which the machine had time called on its opponent in the first round. The rider was making something less than a thousand miles an hour, when he passed a News reporter, going in the direction of St. Joe. Just before reaching the crossing he struck some obtacle, the machine stopping suddenly, causing the ridder to do a circus stunt of a double flipflop through the air, Upon being interrogated as to his injuries he made no reply but said several things in sulphuric language to the machine. It was a narrow escape from serious injury, as he missed the rail road only a few feet. The rider refused to give his name and went limping off pushing his wheel before him.

It would be well for the residents of St. Joe to keep their dwellings and places of business well locked and barred these nights, as there seems to be a n organized gang of burglars operating in this vicinity. Butler, Auburn, Garrett, Kendallville and Waterloo having been visited during the past week.

The farmers are highly pleased over the weather during the past week. Good growing atmosphere and plenty of rain has made many a field of early corn look green with the long furrows just peeping the ground. The corn is practically all in the ground now and that which is up is said to be of exceptionally good stand and very little replanting will have to be done. The oats and wheat look good and the garden truck is going to be abundant and everybody is happy.

Two Dry Two Wet

Laporte and Floyd counties voted wet and Harrison and Monroe counties voted dry in local option elections in this state last week. The victory of the wets in Laporte county where the contest has been bitter, was overwhelming. Early returns indicate that the wet majority was about 4,395. Floyd county voted wet by a majority of about 2,000; the dry majority in Harrison county, 169.

In Monroe county the drys win out by 499 majority. The county seat, Bloomington, is the seat of the Indiana university. The vote was large and the vote a hotly contested one.

Carp Fishing Is Good

Carp fishing has been the leading occupation of the nimrods this week and some good hauls were made in the back waters south and east of town. Everything from a garden hoe to a shotgun was used for the purpose of landing the fish, but "The Man With the Hoe" seemed to have the best persuader, landing a 5½ pound carp. Some of the fishermen threw their catch away and others reserved them for the frying pan. It is said that a carp can be made very palatable by washing and cleaning carefully and then rubbing in a quantity of dry salt and left over night causing the flesh to become as solid as other fish and greatly adding to its flavor.

Put In a New Pump

To expedite matters in filling the tank of the street sprinkler, Claude Mason has placed a one horse power pump in the old tank just east of the B. & O. depot south of the tracks. The pump will raise a bucket of water at each stroke and there being 13 strokes to every revolution of the machine it will be a rapid method of filling the wagon and insure plenty of the dust laying fluid for the streets of St. Joe. Mr. Mason has graded the road leading to the tank and the pull from there will be considerable lessened. This road will be of great benefit to those hauling sand and gravel from the pit near there.

According to report he told his captain that he helped Mrs. Belle Gunness kill four persons on the farm near Laporte, Ind., and that he then killed Mrs. Gunness. The man did not impress the captain as being insane, but as one forced by his conscience to tell the truth. The sailor is under observation as to his mental condition. FREE LUMBER BEATEN BY OVER TWO TO ONE Senate Vote Shows Only 25 for Dropping Duty, While 56 Are Against It.

PARTY LINES ARE BROKEN.

Dolliver Furnishes Surprise of Day by Standing with Anti-Radicals.

No single piece of lumber was ever used more effectually as a seesaw by children than was the great lumber industry Monday by the United States Senate. The lumber schedule of the tariff bill was under consideration almost the entire day, with Senators Root, Heyburn, Borah and Dolliver contending on the one hand for a protection for the industry, and Senators Clapp, Burkett and McCumber arguing as strongly against that policy.

The vote closed with more than a two-thirds vote against Senator McCumber's free lumber amendment, the ballot showing 25 for and 56 against. Of the twenty-five affirmative votes fifteen were cast by Republican Senators and ten by Democratic Senators as follows:

Republicans.

Beveridge,	Curtis,
Bristow,	Dupont,
Brown,	Gamble,
Burkett,	Johnson,
Burton,	La Follette,
Clapp,	McCumber,
Crawford,	Nelson.
Cummins,

Democrats.

Clay,	Newlands,
Culberson,	Paynter,
Frazier,	Rayner,
Gore,	Shively,
Hughes,	Stone.

The surprise of the day was the attitude of Senator Dolliver, who heretofore has stood with the "progressives" throughout the tariff fight. He took positive position against the radical demand for free lumber, but expressed the opinion that the industry would not suffer from a reduction of the Dingley rates.

Senator Root opened the day's proceedings with an argument in favor of a differential on dressed lumber. Senators Borah and Heyburn of Idaho contended for the highest duty on lumber, and Mr. Borah entered upon an argument to show that the policy of protection is "a system" and cannot be maintained if there are to be constant exceptions to it as is desired in the interest of free lumber.

On the other hand, Senators Clapp and Burkett argued that lumber can be produced as cheaply in Canada as in the United States, and contended that the lumber industry of this country would not be endangered by the free admission of the Canadian product. Incidentally Senator Clapp paid a tribute to the Canadian government, saying it was equal to the best.

Woman Among Those Braving Dangers of Alaskan Coast Disaster.

With 194 survivors, including one woman, of the wrecked ship Columbia, the mail steamer Dora arrived at Seward, Alaska, Monday. The wreck occurred April 30 near Unimaka Pass. The experiences of all on the Columbia were harrowing in the extreme. There was no wind at the time, but a terrific surf was raging. On the vessel were Italians, Japanese, Americans and Scandinavians. All were passive and obedient in the face of danger, except the Italians, who were in a panic. These attempted to seize the boats, but were restrained at the point of guns. At daylight the feasibility of a surf landing was established and the boats were given to the Italians. They made land. Two days later they returned for provisions and were compelled by revolvers to take only food and refrain from looting. Two former life-saving men, Christ Christopherson and Ernest Anderson, on that day succeeded in establishing a life line to the shore. On May 2 a storm caused the final abandonment of the wrecked Columbia. The same day the ship burned.

DOG RESCUES TWO PREACHERS.

Saves John Wanamaker's Pastor and Brother from Drowning.

Rev. Asay Ferry, pastor of Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, which John Wanamaker attends, and his brother, Rev. Ebenezer Ferry, pastor of the Morrisville, Pa., Presbyterian Church, were saved from drowning by a shepherd dog. The brothers canoe upset in the Delaware River. They could make no progress and both were rapidly becoming exhausted when the dog plunged in and swam out to them. The dog seized his master's collar in his teeth and dragged him to shallow water. The big shepherd went back after the Philadelphia minister and soon pulled him to shore.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

To the amazement of West Virginia liquor interests, the city council of Charleston voted 22 to 7, to make the city dry.

An authoritative definition of the attitude of the Taft administration toward economic problems was given to the officers of many banks in New York by Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh during a dinner in his honor at the Union League. He said that a new study was to become a part of the government, the study of economic, intelligent and systematic expenditures and revenues in their natural relations.

That the census office has in its employ in one bureau the wife of the secretary of a representative in Congress, the wives of two officials of the War Department and the wife of a prominent official in the Treasury Department was the charge made by Senator McCumber in criticising the conference report on the census bill. The North Dakota Senator said Washington was getting to be a city of official families, the younger members of which had never seen the States to which they were credited.

OKLAHOMA TOWNS ARE FLOODED

Heavy Rain and Hail Storm Causes Damage Over Wild Area.

One of the heaviest rainfalls in northeastern Oklahoma in recent years has swollen Grand River and other streams to the flood stage, causing much damage to railroad property and farms and partially submerging the town of Afton, twelve miles east of Vinita. At Catale, a portion of the trestle work of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway bridge has been carried away. Other bridges are in danger and train service is demoralized. A terrific downpour following a continuous rain of four days caused the Canadian and Arkansas rivers and their tributaries to rise rapidly. The streets and many houses in Muskogee were flooded by the storm. Six inches of rain fell in three hours in a territory fifteen miles in length, extending from South Haven, Kan., into Oklahoma. The rain was accompanied by sheets of hail that beat the grain into the ground.

VETERAN'S WIFE FIGHTS THIEF

Mrs. Helen Longstreet in Revolver Battle with Burglar.

Mrs. Helen G. Longstreet, widow of the Confederate general and postmistress of Gainesville, Ga., was awakened about 2 o'clock in the morning by a noise in the house. Securing a pistol she went to investigate. When she entered the dining room she saw a man trying to open a closet in which table silver was kept. She called to him and the man turned and ran for a window. Mrs. Longstreet opened fire and the robber drew a pistol and fired once. Mrs. Longstreet continued firing at the fleeing man until her revolver was empty. She thinks she hit the man, as after one shot he staggered and nearly fell. The firing alarmed the quarter of the city in which Mrs. Longstreet resides and caused a crowd to gather.

NEGRO IS HANGED BY MOB.

Three Hundred Men Lynch Black at Pine Bluff, Ark.

Lovett Davis, a negro charged with attempting to attack a 16-year-old white girl in Pine Bluff, Ark., last Friday night, was taken from the jail at midnight by a mob of 300 men and hanged from a telegraph pole on one of the principal streets. Just as the negro was being raised above the street the rope broke and the body fell to the ground, but was raised again and left hanging. Early in the night the sheriff had secreted a number of heavily armed deputies in the jail, but they were overpowered and the jail was entered with sledge hammers. Several prominent men made speeches to dissuade the mob, but of no avail.

TOWN GETS FIRST CHURCH.

Former County Seat Has Had Joss House as Only Place of Worship.

The corner stone of the Methodist church, the first Christian place of worship in Hawthorne, Nev., was laid Wednesday. A town of 1,500 persons, prosperous, formerly the county seat, and in the heart of a rich mining district, Hawthorne never has had a church. The only religious edifice has been a Chinese joss house, which was practically abandoned more than a year ago. Several years ago Goldfield succeeded in taking the county seat away from Hawthorne—one of the arguments being that "Hawthorne did not have a church."

CHILDREN MADE TORCHES.

Five Burned Perhaps Fatally by Fire at a Commencement.

Five children who took part in the commencement exercises of Mrs. B. C. Boyd's school in Central City, Ky., on Monday night were burned, perhaps fatally, and the audience was changed from an applauding crowd to a fighting mob. Men in the audience covered the flaming children with their coats and thus saved them. Little Dorothy Clay was the unwitting cause of the fire. The children had formed in a circle and had drilled in their white muslin dresses. Then the lights were extinguished and a candle in the hand of each child flashed out. The audience applauded so enthusiastically that Dorothy became frightened and dropped her candle. The flame leaped to the white muslin, and in a twinkling five dresses were afire. Mothers fought to reach their children and the children made efforts to clamber over the footlights.

IOWA MAYOR SHOT BY BURGLAR.

Intruder Who Wounds the Executive of Cedar Rapids Escapes.

A series of sensational burglaries in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, came to a climax early Monday when an unknown thief shot and dangerously wounded Mayor John T. Carmody. Previous to entering Carmody's house the burglar robbed Father J. J. Toomey's home, covering the priest with his revolver. While the police were investigating the Toomey affair the bandit entered the Carmody home, two blocks distant. The mayor was aroused, grappled with the intruder and was shot in the abdomen. Carmody continued to fight, but finally fell exhausted at the bottom of the stairs while his assailant escaped. The shooting caused great excitement. Carmody was taken to a hospital.

The outbreak of the Albanian garrison at Uskup, Tuesday, about 100 miles north of Saloniki, where the deposed Sultan of Turkey is a prisoner, was believed at Constantinople to be the beginning of an uprising under the leadership of the Sultan's son, Berrhen-Eddin, for the purpose of reinstating Abdul Hamid on the throne.

The commission which is taking an inventory of the property at the imperial palace at Yildiz has discovered, according to the local newspapers, bank notes to the value of $2,250,000 and a large quantity of jewelry, including one rosary alone valued at $375,000. Papers seized at the palace show that Abdul Hamid had over $5,000,000 on deposit in foreign banks. These refuse to give up the cash to the Young Turks.

BANDITS ROB CHICAGO TRAIN NEAR OMAHA

Force Engineer to Apply Brakes and Force Postal Clerks to Give Up Mail.

PURSUED BY POLICE IN AUTOS.

Hold-Up Is Accomplished with Neatness and Expedition—Passengers Not Molested.

Four masked men held up and robbed Union Pacific train No. 2, known as the Overland Limited, a few miles west of Omaha just before midnight Saturday and secured a number of registered mail pouches. The exact number of sacks taken is not known, but they are believed to have contained a large sum. The robbers are being sought by squads of Omaha police in automobiles.

The hold-up occurred about a mile west of the city limits, in a deep cut along the recently constructed Lane cut-off. The robbers climbed over the tank, forced the engineer to stop his train and then proceeded to the mail car. The clerks were forced to open the door and hand out a number of pouches of registered mail. Once the robbers secured the bags, they hurried away in a southerly direction and permitted the train to proceed. The passengers were not molested. As soon as the robbers left the train proceeded to Omaha.

Two of the robbers climbed into the engine with drawn revolvers and forced the engineer to stop the train. The engine crew was ordered out of the cab and two of the robbers stood guard, while the other two escorted the engineer and fireman to the rear. The quartette were apparently well acquainted with the ground, as they forced the train to stop in a deep cut.

There were eight clerks on the mail car and they were forced to open the door. The chief clerk was singled out and asked to point out the registered mail. This he did and the robbers gathered up seven pouches and the leader then remarked: "This is all we can get into our automobile." They left the scene quickly, walked down the track 300 feet and clambered out of the cut.

A continuous fusillade of shooting was kept up during the robbery, evidently to intimidate passengers and crew. A flagman who went to the rear narrowly escaped being shot. Several passengers who had not retired started to get out of the vestibules, but in no uncertain tones the robbers ordered them back into the cars.

RULES NEGRO INFERIOR.

Judge Holds He Can't Be Damaged as Much as White by Jail Term.

A colored man is inferior to a white man, according to a decision of Justice Dugro of the Supreme Court of New York. This all came out before the Appellate Division the other day in the matter of Griffin versus Brady. Daniel M. Brady, president of a brass company and brother of "Diamond Jim," three years ago lost a card case containing money and passes on a train. He caused the arrest of George W. Griffin, the colored porter of his car. Griffin was tried and acquitted in Montreal. He brought suit against Brady in New York City and got a verdict for $2,500. Brady moved to have this set aside as excessive and the justice agreed with him. He said in ruling: "No such verdict would stand in any court for the plaintiff in this case. He earned less than a dollar a day. He was a colored man and, while the law says he is as good as the President of the United States, it would be a bad argument to say that he is as good in many senses."

BIGGEST DRY GOODS COMPANY.

Capital of New Concern Launched in New York Is $51,000,000.

The world's greatest dry goods combination was launched in New York Friday. Its capital is $51,000,000, three times that of the Associated Merchants' Company, up to this time the largest aggregation of capital in the dry goods business. John Claflin, president of the Associated Merchants' Company, is head of the new company, which has been christened the United Dry Goods Companies of New York. The incorporation papers were filed in Dover, Del. Two of the three directors named in the papers are Eugene D. Alexander of New Brighton, S. I., and Kenneth McEwen, clerks in the office of Gould & Wilkie. The other director is Thomas F. Bayard of Wilmington, Del., counsel for the company in that State. There was much uncertainty as to the exact purpose of the new company, but it is understood it will take over the already tremendous business of the Associated Merchants' Company.

TRIES TO KILL FOUR.

Farmer's Wife Cuts Throat of Three Children and Herself.

Mrs. Louis Carsten cut the throats of her three children and then her own at the Carsten home, a farm about two miles from East Hampton, Conn. Two of the children—Louis, 10 years old, and a girl 10 months old—are dead, and Mrs. Carsten and a 7-year-old boy are dying. No motive for the woman's deed is known.

They spent the day in the saddle riding over the range. The ridiculous character of the Poindexter undertaking could not spoil the real value of the land. There was, Saxton could see, the making here of a great farming property; he felt his old interest in outdoor life quickening as he rode back to the house in the evening.

Snyder cooked supper for both of them, while Saxton repaired a decrepit windmill which had been designed to supply the house with water. He had formed a poor opinion of the caretaker, who had no well-defined duties. There was nothing for any one to do unless the range were again stocked and cattle raising undertaken as a serious business. Saxton was used to rough men and their ways. He had a happy faculty of adapting himself to the conversational capacities of illiterate men, and enjoyed drawing them out and getting their point of view; but Snyder's was not a visage that inspired confidence. He had a great shock of black hair and a scraggy beard. He lacked an eye, and he had a habit of drawing his head around in order to accommodate his remaining orb to any necessity. He did this with an insinuating kind of deliberation that became tiresome in a long interview.

"This place is too fancy to be of much use," the man vouchsafed. "You may find some dude that wants to plant money where another dude has dug the first hole; but I reckon you'll have a hard time catching him. A real cattleman wouldn't care for all this house. It might be made into a stable, but a horse would look ridiculous in here. You might have a corn crib made out of it; or it would do for a hotel if you could get dudes to spend the summer here; but I reckon it's a little hot out here for summer boarders."

"The only real value is in the land," said Saxton. "I'm told there's no better on the river. The house is a handicap, or would be so regarded by the kind of men who make money out of cattle. Have you ever tried rounding up the cattle that strayed through the fences? The Poindexter crowd must have branded their last calves about two years ago. Assuming that only a part of them was sold or run off, there ought to be some two-year-olds still loose in this country and they'd be worth finding."

"Yer jokin' I guess. These fellers around here are good fellers, and all that, but I guess they don't give anything back. I guess we ain't got any cattle coming to us."

"Who've you been reporting to, Snyder?"

"How's that?"

"Who have you been considering yourself responsible to?"

"Well, Jim Wheaton at the Clarkson National hired me, and I reckon I'd report to him if I reported to anybody. But if you're going to run this shebang and want to be reported to, I guess I can report to you."

"I want you to report to me," said John, quietly. "In the first place I want the house and the other buildings cleaned out. After than the fences must be put in shape. And then we'll see if we can't find some of our cows. You can't tell; we may open up a real ranch here and go into business."

"Well, if you're the boss I'll do it your way. I got along all right with Wheaton."

Saxton determined to leave for Clarkson the following morning, and formulated in his mind the result of his journey and plans for the future of the incongruous combination of properties that had been entrusted to him. He sat for an hour looking out over the moon-lit valley. He followed the long sweep of the plain, through which he could see for miles the bright ribbon of the river. A train of cars rumbled far away, on the iron trail between the two oceans, intensifying the loneliness of the strange house.

"I seem to find only the lonely places,' he said aloud.

In the morning he ate the breakfast of coffee, hardtack and bacon which Snyder prepared. Snyder rode with him to the railway station.

"Give my regards to Mr. Wheaton," he said, as Saxton swung himself into the train. "You'll find me here at the old stand when you come back."

"A queer customer and undoubtedly a bad lot," was Saxton's reflection.

When Saxton had written out the report of his trip he took it to Wheaton, to get his suggestions before forwarding it to Boston. He looked upon the cashier as his predecessor, and wished to avail himself of Wheaton's knowledge of the local conditions affecting the several properties that had now passed to his care. Wheaton undoubtedly wished to be of assistance, and in their discussion of the report, the cashier made many suggestions of value, of which Saxton was glad to avail himself.

"As to the Poindexter place," said Saxton finally, "I've been advertising it for sale in the hope of finding a buyer, but without results. The people at headquarters can't bother about the details of these things, but I can't see why we should maintain a caretaker. There's nothing to take care of. That house is worse than useless. I'm going back in a few days to see if I can't coax home some of the cattle we're entitled to, and then I suppose we may as well dispense with Snyder."

"I don't see that there's anything else to do," Wheaton answered. "I've been to the ranch, and there's little personal property there forth caring for. That man Snyder came along one day and asked for a job and I sent him out there thinking he'd keep things in order until the Trust Company sent its own representative here."

There were times when Wheaton's black eyes contracted curiously, and this was one of the times.

"I don't like discharging a man that you've employed," Saxton replied.

"Oh, that's all right. You can't keep him if he performs no service. Don't trouble about him on my account. How soon are you going back there?"

"Next week some time."

Saxton was not surprised when he returned to the ranch to find that Snyder had made no effort to obey his instructions. He made his visit unexpectedly. He reached the house in the middle of the morning and found the front door bolted and barred on the inside. After much pounding he succeeded in bringing Snyder to the door, evidently both surprised and displeased at his interruption.

"Howdy, boss," was the salutation of the frowsy custodian; "I wasn't feeling just right to-day and was takin' a little nap."

The great hall showed signs of a carousal. The dirt had increased since Saxton's first appearance. Empty bottles that had been doing service as candlesticks stood in their greasy shrouds on the table. Saxton sat down on a keg, which had evidently been recently emptied. He resolved to make quick work of Snyder.

"How many cattle have you rounded up since I was here?" he demanded.

"Well, to tell the truth," began Snyder, "there ain't been much time for doing that since you was here."

"No; I suppose you were busy mending fences and cleaning house. Now you have been drawing forty dollars a month for doing nothing. I'll treat you better than you deserve and give you ten dollars bonus to get out. I believe the pony in the corral belongs to you. We'll let it go at that. Here's your money."

"Well, I guess as Mr. Wheaton hired me, he'd better fire me."

"Yes, I spoke to Mr. Wheaton about you. He understands that you're to go."

"He does, does he?" Snyder replied with a sneer. "He must have forgot that I had an arrangement with him by the year."

"Well, it's all off," said Saxton, rising. He began throwing open the windors and doors to let in fresh air.

"Well, I guess I'll have to see Mr. Wheaton," Snyder retorted, finding that Saxton was paying no further attention to him. He collected his few belongings, watching in astonishment the violence with which Saxton was gathering up and disposing of rubbish.

"He seems to be more interested in Wheaton than Wheaton is in him," observed Saxton to himself.

Saxton spent a week at Great River. He hired a man to repair fences and put the house in order. He visited several of the large ranch owners and asked them for aid in picking out the scattered remnants of the Poindexter herd. Nearly all of the nvolunteered to help, with the result that he collected about one hundred cattle and sold them at Great River for cash. He expected to see or hear of Snyder in the town but the fellow had disappeared.

CHAPTER V.

James Wheaton was 35 years old, and was reckoned aming the solid business men of Clarkson. He had succeeded far beyond his expectations and was fairly content with the round of the ladder that he had reached. He never talked about himself and as he had no intimate friends it had never been necessary for him to give confidences. His father had been a harness-maker in a little Ohio town; he and his older brother were expected to follow the same business; but the brother grew restless under the threat of enforced apprenticeship and prevailed on James to run away with him. They became tramps and enjoyed themselves roaming through the country, until finally they were caught stealing in a little Illinois village and both were arrested.

James was discharged through the generosity of his brother in taking all the blame on himself; the older boy was sent to a reformatory alone. James then went to Chicago, where he sold papers and blacked boots for a year until he found employment as a train boy, with a company operating on various lines running out of Chicago. This gave him a wide acquaintance with Western towns, and incidentally with railroads and railroad men. He grew tired of the road, and obtained at Clarkson a position in the office of Timothy Margrave, the general manager of the Transcontinental, which, he had heard, was a great primary school for ambitious boys.

He attended night school, was assiduous in his duties, and attained in due course the dignity of a desk as which he took the cards of Margrave's callers, indexed the letter books and copied figures under the direction of the chief clerk. After a year, hearing that one of the Clarkson National Bank's messengers was about to resign, he applied for this place. Margrave recommended him; the local manager of the news agency vouched for his integrity, and in due course he wended the streets of Clarkson with a long bill-book, the outward and visible sign of his position as messenger. He was steadily promoted in the bank and felt his past receding farther and farther behind him.

When, at an important hour of his life, Wheaton was promoted to be paying teller, he was in the receiving teller's cage. He had known that the more desirable position was vacant and had heard his fellow clerks speculating as to the possibility of a promotion from among their number. Thompson, the cashier, had a nephew in the bank; and among the clerks he was thought to have the best chance. They all knew that the directors were in session, and several whose tasks for the day were finished, lingered later than was their wont to see what would happen. Wheaton kept quietly at his work; but he had an eye on the door of the directors' room, and an ear that insensibly turned toward the annunciator by which messengers were called to the board room. It rang at last, and Wheaton wiped his pen with a little more than his usual care as he waited for the result of the summons. This was on his twenty-fifth birthday.

"Mr. Wheaton!" The other clerks looked at one another. The question that had been uppermost with all of them for a week past was answered. Thompson's nephew slammed his book shut and carried it into the vault. Wheaton put aside the balance sheet over which he had been lingering and went into the directors' room. There had been no note of joy among his associates. He knew that he was not popular with them; he was not, in their sense, a good fellow. When they rushed off after hours to the ball games or horse races, he never joined them. When their books did not balance he never volunteered to help them. As for himself, he always balanced, and did not need their help; and they hated him for it. This was his hour of triumph, but he went to his victory without the cheer of his comrades.

Later, when need arose for creating the position of assistant cashier, it was natural that the new desk should be assigned to Wheaton. He was faithful and competent; neither Porter nor Thompson had a son to install in the bank; and, as they said to each other and to their fellow directors, Wheaton had two distinguishing qualifications—he did his work and he kept his mouth shut.

In the course of time Thompson's health broke down and the doctors ordered him away to New Mexico, and again there seemed nothing to do but to promote Wheaton. Thompson wished to sell his stock and resign, but Porter would not have it so; but when, after two years, it was clear that the cashier would never again be fit for continuous service in the bank, Wheaton was duly elected cashier and Thompson was made vice president.

The relations between Porter and Wheaton were strictly of a business character. This was not by intention on Porter's part. He assumed that at some time he or Thompson had known all about Wheaton's antecedents; and after so many years of satisfactory service, during the greater part of which the bank had been protected against Wheaton, as against all the rest of the employes, by a bonding company, he accepted the cashier without any question. Before Evelyn's return he had one day expressed to Wheaton his satisfaction that he would soon have a home again, and Wheaton remarked with civil sympathy that Miss Porter must now be "quite a young lady."

"Oh, yes; you must come up to the house when we get going again," Porter answered.

Wheaton had seen the inside of few houses in Clarkson. He had a recollection of having been sent to Porter's several times, while he was still an errand boy in the bank, to fetch Porter's bag on occasions when the president had been called away unexpectedly. He remembered Evelyn Porter as she used to come as a child and sit in the carriage outside the bank to wait for her father; the Porters stood to him them, and now, for wealth and power.

Raridan had a contempt for Wheaton's intellectual deficiencies; and praise of Wheaton's steadiness and success vexed him as having some sting for himself; but his own amiable impulses got the better of his prejudices, and he showed Wheaton many kindnesses. When the others at The Bachelors' nagged Wheaton, it was Raridan who threw himself into the controversy to take Wheaton's part. He took him to call at some of the houses he knew best, and though this was a matter of propinquity he knew nevertheless that he preferred Wheaton to the others in the house. Wheaton was not noisy nor pretentious and the others were sometimes both.

Wheaton soon found it easy to do things that he had never thought of doing before. He became known to the florist and haberdasher; there was a little Hambletonian at a certain liveryman's which Warry Raridan drove a good deal, and he had learned from Warry how pleasant it was to drive out to the new country club in a runabout instead of using the street car, which left a margin of plebeian walking at the end of the line. But while he acquired the superficial graces, he did not lose his instinctive thrift; he had never attempted to plunge, even on what his associates at The Bachelors' called "sure things;" and he was equally incapable of personal extravagances. If he bought flowers he sent them where they would tell in his favor. If he had five dollars to give to the Ice Fund for the poor, he considered that when the newspaper printed his name in its list of acknowledgements, between Timothy Margrave, who gave fifty dollars, and William Porter, who gave twenty-five, he had received an adequate return on his investment.

Women and the Stage.

David Belasco was in his best mood at a dinner preceding his vacation—his first vacation in twenty long, hard years. In the course of a learned review of barefoot dancing, problem plays and suchlike outcroppings of stage history, he smiled and said:

"It may be true, as some have claimed, that immoral plays are due to the immoral taste of woman. Yes, that may be true; but, gentlemen, did you ever watch at the theater an elderly, staid, perhaps somewhat unprepossessing wife, brooding over a husband a little younger than herself? These wives, surely, are no supporters of the immoral stage spectacle. Such a wife sat in one of my theaters during the production of a drama. The heroine, a beautiful girl, said at a dramatic moment:

"'Merciful heavens, I am undone!'

"The wife rose hurriedly.

"'Come, Clarence,' she murmured, sternly. 'We've had enough of this. I'm not going to have you drinkin' in any Salome dance or disrobin' act.'"

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Payments through the banks and lower defaults testify to healthier conditions. The commercial outlook is keener and awaits an early settlement of tariff revision. Developments as a whole carry the encouragement which stimulates enterprise, renewed strength and confidence being well established. Current activities are conspicuous in the enlarged movements of heavy materials, factory products, general merchandise and grain. The outgo of provisions also is increased, although live stock arrivals declined and packing capacity works under the normal.

Weather conditions have favored more extended operations in the leading industries, construction and building, and gain is seen in the absorption of seasonable goods, but more warmth is needed for an adequate disposition of light-weight apparel, retailers not yet securing ample sales.

Cheaper prints and costlier tendencies of wool fabrics induce more widespread orders in wholesale dry goods and clothing. This has brought larger numbers of visiting buyers into the markets for staples, and bookings rise for immediate and fall shipments of textiles, footwear, men's furnishings, furniture and household needs.

Inquiries for furnace and mill outputs extend farther into the future and the contracts closed reflect distinct progress in iron, wood, brass and leather working. Railway orders appear more freely and assure increasing activity at the forges and equipment plants. Building materials are under the greatest consumption known here, and this stiffens prices and puts the building trades upon a substantial basis.

Bank clearings, $271,814,502, exceed those of the corresponding week in 1908 by 19.5 per cent and compare with $252,032,830 in 1907. Failures reported in the Chicago district number 24, against 36 last week, 28 in 1908 and 14 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 10, against 4 last week, 7 in 1908 and 4 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Weather conditions continue irregular, but a change for the better has occurred in staple crop conditions, and retail business is slightly improved, though disappointing and showing evidences of the repression heretofore evident. Re-order business from jobbers and wholesalers has been rather quiet, but there is, if anything, a more assured optimism permeating the reports as to the outlook for next fall and winter trade.

Best reports as to retail trade comes from the upper part of the great central valley and its tributaries. Cold wet weather has interfered with business in parts of New England and the middle Atlantic States, and trade seems slow to improve in San Francisco and in parts of the Pacific Northwest.

All indications of activity have to do with future trade, the expectation being that the removal of tariff uncertainty will give an impetus to general business. Retail trade, though better than a year ago, has been on the whole disappointing, causes assigned for this being weather conditions and the high prices of the general public.

Business failures in the United States for the week were 219, against 224 last week, 284 in the like week of 1908, 165 in 1907, 170 in 1906 and 179 in 1905. Canadian failures for the week were 25, against 30 last week and 39 in same week last year.—Bradstreet's.

CHICAGO AND VICINITY SHOCKED BY A QUAKE

Jolt Pronounced Most Severe Ever Experienced Throughout the Territory Affected.

TREMOR FELT IN FOUR STATES

Disturbance Noticeable Over Wide Range in Middle States, but No Serious Damage Reported.

An earthquake, the first in several years, was felt in Chicago at 8:40 o'clock Wednesday morning, embracing many States in its range. From Springfield to Milwaukee and from Burlington, Iowa, to Kalamazoo, Mich., reports of the progress of the trembler kept wires busy in all directions. In Maywood, Lockport, Joliet, Riverside, Downers Grove, Hinsdale, Naperville, Elgin and Evanston distinct shocks were felt. No serious damage was reported at any point, however.

The progress of the quake seems to have been from south to north. The oscillation of the earth was recorded on the new weather bureau seismograph at Peoria at 8:38 o'clock. It was 8:40 when the trembler gripped the Federal building in Chicago and 8:45 when it was felt in Iowa. Various descriptions of the effects of the slight quake were given. Its duration was estimated at between five and ten seconds in Chicago, but outside the time was given in some places at half a minute.

Press dispatches brought a succession of accounts of the earthquake from Springfield, Peoria, Freeport, Aurora, Bloomington, Kewanee, Geneva, Streator, Dixon, Rockford, Moline, Ill.; Milwaukee, Janesville, Beloit, Wis.; Cedar Rapids, Dubuque, Burlington, Iowa; Kalamazoo, Muskegon, Mich., and many other points. Broken china and windows were reported from South Haven and Benton Harbor, Mich. Fires were believed to have been started by the disturbance in Aurora, but no losses were sustained. At Streator half a minute was given as the duration of the quiver of the earth, the shake being accompanied by a faint rumbling noise. Chimneys were displaced in Joliet where apparently were some of the most serious effects.

"The last earthquake of which the Chicago weather office has any record," said Professor Cox, "occurred at 5 o'clock in the morning of Oct. 31, 1895. Quakes are very rare in this locality, but no place is immune from the tremors occasioned by readjustments of the earth's surface. There is no seismograph in the Chicago office. It would be impossible to use such an instrument effectively in Chicago, for it must be removed from local vibrations and must be established on bedrock."

ILLINOIS ELECTS LORIMER.

Deadlock in the Legislature, Existing Since First of Year, Broken.

William Lorimer, Congressman and political leader of Chicago, was elected United States Senator in a stampede that brought the Illinois legislative deadlock of months to an end. Albert J. Hopkins, former Senator, who had maintained the lead throughout, was taken by surprise when the Lorimer strength began to assert itself and could not stem the flood.

The deadlock on the United States senatorship, which is without precedent in Illinois political history in many important particulars, began Jan. 20, when the first ballot was cast in joint assembly, Hopkins receiving 39 votes, Stringer 76, Foss 16, Shurtleff 12, and Mason 6. Up to the ninety-first ballot, 135 men had been voted for during the deadlock, 114 being Democrats and 22 Republicans.

IN A NUTSHELL

Fire at Long Island, Kan., destroyed four business buildings. Loss $100,000.

C. L. Hutchinson of Chicago was elected president of the American Federation of Arts at the Washington meeting.

Ruth Mitchell, aged 5, was instantly killed at Highland, Cal., by the accidental discharge of a revolver in the hands of Harold, her brother, aged 8.

Fire, believed the result of trouble growing out of the strike in the East Side bakeries, destroyed the plant of the Star Baking Company at 105 Thomas street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Loss $100,000.

Two hundred thousand dollars loss was caused by a fire which swept through one end of a five-story building at 433 to 537 7th avenue, New York, used by the Grand Rapids Furniture Company as a warehouse.

Surrounded by fellow fraternity men and distinguished guests, Frank W. Carpenter, secretary to President Taft, was tendered a banquet in Washington by the members of the Georgetown Active and Washington Alumni chapters of the Delti Chi fraternities.

Work of Congress

The lumber schedule of the tariff bill was under consideration almost the entire day Monday in the Senate, with Senators Root, Heyburn, Borah and Dolliver contending on the one hand for a protection for the industry, and Senators Clapp, Burkett and McCumber arguing as strenuously against that policy. The day closed with more than a two-thirds vote against Senator McCumber's free lumber amendment, the ballot showing 25 for and 56 against. The surprise of the day was the attitude of Senator Dolliver, who heretofore has stood with the "progressives." He took positive position against the radical demand for free lumber, but expressed the opinion that the industry would not suffer from a reduction of the Dingley rates. Senator Root argued in favor of a differential on dressed lumber. Senators Borah and Heyburn of Idaho contended for the highest duty on lumber. During the day Senator Heyburn spoke of the Republican platform of the last campaign in a way that brought down some criticism on his head, and Senator Bailey declared that he did not propose to be bound by the platform adopted by the Democrats at Denver. Senator Owen made a sharp attack upon the present tariff on sugar, saying that it led to frauds by a "trust." Senator Aldrich introduced a resolution providing for an investigation of the expenditures of the various legislative departments. The Republicans of the House again took matters in their own hands, and with a sudden show of strength passed the Philippine tariff bill, the consideration of which had been concluded two weeks ago, referred the message of the President regarding Porto Rican affairs to the committee on ways and means and devoted some time to a discussion of the bill amending the laws of Porto Rico so as to divest the legislature of certain authority. When the body met Mr. Macon (Ark.) made his usual point of no quorum, but Mr. Payne, instead of moving an adjournment, as he had done heretofore, forced a call of the House, and a quorum appeared within a short time. The feature of the day was a speech of considerable length by Mr. Larringa, the Porto Rican commissioner, vigorously opposing the bill affecting the island represented by him and denouncing the executive council or upper branch of the legislature of Porto Rico. The bill was pending when the House adjourned until Thursday.

The Senate Tuesday began the formal consideration of the sugar schedule, but did not approach a vote upon it. Instead, the time allotted to this schedule was entirely given over to speech-making, and strange to say, the two speeches on the subject, while made by Democrats, were in strong advocacy of a high tariff on sugar of all grades. The speeches were by Senators Foster and McEnery of Louisiana. Mr. Foster laughingly deprecated the application of the word "protection" to his attitude, but Mr. McEnery boldly espoused the protective theory and openly advised his Democratic friends to follow his example. He declared protection to be in the line of Democratic policy. The lumber schedule was temporarily put aside in order to permit the committee on finance to make changes in it. Early in the day Senator Beveridge addressed the Senate at some length in support of his contention that President Taft had previous to and after his nomination been a consistent advocate of a downward revision of the tariff. The House was not in session.

President Taft is entering in good on a system of economy which will save the country many million dollars if Congress will do its part. Tnere are some sceptics who point to the fact that every administration has been inaugurated with a burst of economy but that the policy has soon been abandoned and forgotten. The system of economy undertaken by the Taft administration deserves more, however, than dismissal on this ground. The President has appointed a sub-committee of the cabinet to supervise the estimates for federal exdenditures which are submitted to Congress at the beginning of each session and under the supervision of this committee members of the cabinet are being required to hold down their estimates to certain figures. The secretary of the navy, for instance, has cut his estimates to be submitted to Congress in Decembe r $10,000,000 below the expenditures for the current year. The secretary of war has been asked to cut $38,000,000 off the army budget if possible and to cut off $20,000,000 at least. The new cabinet is doing its part, but when the estimates under this system are submitted to Congress they will provide for those things which are only actually needed. Then will arise the interesting question, what will Congress do with the estimates? If Congress follows its custom it will cut out a number of essentials and insert a large number of the non-essentials which are not for the benefit of the army or navy, but which are useful in the furthering the political interests of senators and representatives. For instance, provision will be made for the purchase of supplies which are not needed but which some constituent of Representative Blank wants to sell to the army. Another provision will be made for work at such and such a navy yard so that as many men as possible in Representative somebody-else's district can be employed on the eve of the election, and so on. Then in order to prevent the total from exceeding the estimates some absolutely necessary items will be cut out. If Congress pursues that course the efforts of the administration to cut down expenses will meet with such discouragement that they will be abandoned and the old practice of asking for four battleships, for instance, in order to get two will be reverted to. Under the circumstances Congress will be blamed as a whole, but will the people who judge of the usefulness of their Congressman by the number of men for whom he secures employment in the local navy yard, or by the amount of patronage he secures for the local factory be wholly blameless?

It is an unfortunate provision of the federal constitution which makes it impossible for the President to veto certain items in an appropriation bill without disapproving the entire bill. This lack of power has led many a President to approve a measure containing a number of improper provisions because it was important to the country that the entire bill should not fail. Most of the states authorize their governors to veto individual items in the appropriation bills, or budgets, and in some of them there is even complaint that the Governor has not the power to cut down without striking out individual items. Unfortunately, apparently, the framers of the constitution too greatly feared increasing the power of the Executive to prevent to their conferring this power on him.

There is many a man whose words rise up to the plague him and we cannot but wonder if that is not true, to some extent at least, of President Taft. When Mr. Taft was delivering his speech of acceptance at Cincinnati last July, he defined the rights of labor, saying that laboring men had the right to strike so long as they did not use violence, that they had the right to pursuade their fellow workmen to join their unions so long as they did not exert duress in so doing. Now the firemen of the Georgia Railroad have struck. The road undertook to employ negro firemen and the white firemen walked out. They have evidently read Judge Taft's speech defining their rights and they are keeping well within them as he defined them. But the railroad cannot run and the mills are not hauled. As long as there is no overt act on the part of the strikers the courts cannot interfere and although the railroad has begged for some federal interference, the administration is powerless to do anything to remedy the situation. The men have been on a strike for nine days and not a single act of violence has been recorded.

20 Years With Heart Trouble

"Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has cured me of heart disease of over 20 years' standing. I was so bad that I could not do my work, and could scarcely draw a full breath without fainting or smothering. The doctor told me he could do no more for me; then I commenced taking the Heart Remedy. I shall never forget that night. I slept better than I had before in months. I kept right on getting better, until I was perfectly well."

MRS. LAURA RUSSELL,
Logan, Iowa.

When the heart action is weak, it fails to pump the blood through the lungs with sufficient rapidity. Then the lungs do not absorb the proper amount of oxygen, although they may be taking in a normal amount of air. The result is shortness of breath, smothering spells, difficult breathing, oppressed feeling in chest. Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy strengthens the heart nerves and muscles, and in this way increases the circulation.

Household Interests.

Far too many look upon food as a means of satisfying hunger, instead of realizing that it is for the purpose of supplying the demands of the body in the work of providing bone and muscle heat and energy. The first view concerns itself with amount and taste, chiefly; the last with nutriment. By choosing nutriment first, one also secures variety and taste and avoids, in a measure at least, a great excess of food.

Whoever plans a well-balanced meal must study food materials, and the products of the cook's art from the standpoint of nutrition. She must know exactly which of the dishes put upon the table are nourishing, which are meant to coax the appetite and which are intended as cheats—good to taste but affording little nourishment and almost no bulk. This sounds formidable, but is really quite simple.

In the first place we must know that food chemists have found that vast variety of food materials is made up of but five elements, which are known as the "food principles." These elements are in combination-that is, one is rarely found alone, and the predominating element names the food material. For instance, meat is largely proteid, and is called a proteid food; for a similar reason potatoes and rice are classed as starch. That statement reminds us that carbohydrates include two thing; starches and sugars. One more fact must be mastered before we are ready to study particular foods. The work which each of these food elements performs in body-building is important, and reminds us forcibly that food is for nourishment. The body needs four things; bone, muscle, heat and energy. Proteids supply the bone and muscle, while carbohydrates and fats furnish heat and energy. Mineral salts and water are important aids in all lines of body-building, but need not be considered further for our purpose.—"The Household Interests," in The Ladies' World for June.

A Communication.

Editor of St. Joe News.

Dear Sir: I wish to say to your people that the DeKalb Co., Board of Health has for several years worked faithfully to systematize and bring a complete and regular report of all births, deaths, contagious and infectious diseases occuring in DeKalb Co. To accomplish this we need the assistance of everyone. This we are receiving from every part of the county excepting the southeast part. From that part there seems to be a neglect of duty in this particular work. I write this in hopes to call the attention of those heretofore neglectful in order that it may be stimulative to their full duty without further demands.

Physicians and undertakers are especially urged to be more prompt. Burial of any human body over 7 months without a permit from some health officer is a violation with a severe penalty attached and then a neglect to promptly make proper returns of burial is another.

Any neglect on the part of parent or physician to promptly report all births, deaths or contagious diseases, is subject to severe penalty.

J. B. CASEBEER,
DeKalb Co. Health Officer.

Of the five hundred and fifty odd old employes of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad - not inclusive of the B. & O. S. W. or subsidiary lines - now on pension roll for the rdgular monthly allowance the company pays to them during life, half the number were in active service forty and more years, forty-nine of them exceeding fifty or more years; one rounding out a full sixty years. The combined years of service those veterans put in aggregated nearly twelve thousand, which was an average of forty-four and two-thirds years each. A record showing of continuous duty with a single corporation. Forty-three of these pioneers in American railroading are now eighty and more years of age, thirteen of them having passed their eighty-fifth milestone; two reaching beyond their ninety-first. Old age provision for faithful service was inaugurated by the B. & O. company long in advance of any other railroad on the American continent and it was the first railroad company in the world to establish a pension system on the basis of itself contributing the entire fund; foreign railroad pension, or superannuation funds as they are termed abroad, calling for most of the amount from the men through their own contributions. The earliest corporate movement of any nature on this side looking to care for employes was that of the Baltimore and Ohio way back in 1844. Its present plan, under which eligibility for pension is after twenty years service, has been in effect for a quarter of a century and there are employes still living who have been on the pension roll for upwards of two decades.

A Thrilling Rescue.

How Bert R. Lean, of Cheny, Wash., was saved from a frightful death is a story to thrill the world. "A hard cold," he writes, "brought on a desperate lung trouble that baffled an expert doctor here. Then I paid $10 to $15 a visit to a lung specialist in Spokane, who did not help me. Then I went to California, but without benefit. At last I used Dr. King's New Discovery, which completely cured me and now I am as well as ever." The storm formed half a mile southwest of Zephyr and swept down upon the village, cutting a wide swath through the residence and business district. Business blocks were destroyed. Women Who Are Envied.

Those attractive women who are lovely in face, form and temper are the envy of many, who might be like them. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. A CONSTIPATION REMEDY FREE

There is no action of your daily life of greater importance than to see that your bowels move. They should move at least once a day naturally, and by that is meant without any help. If they do not move at least once a day you can consider yourself constipated and it is time you did something about it.

You will be glad to know there is a way out of the difficulty. Lemuel Landerdale, an old soldier at Quincy, Ill.; Elmer McMillan, of Speed, Mo.; Mrs. Monahan, of Stonewall, Miss., and many others were as you are now. But one day they awoke to the fact that Dr. Caldwell's "Syrup Pepsin was curing their friends, so they bought it too and it cured them. To-day, they are loud in praise of it.

What Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin did for them it should do for you. Surely your constipation is no worse than theirs, one of whom had it since '61. It only remains for you to realize that salts are of but temporary good, and what you want is a permanent cure: that purgative tablets, cathartic pills and such violent things make a great show of doing something, but do nothing that is lasting. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a scientific preparation, a laxative-tonic, a mild syrupy liquid that contains ingredients that not only cure the constipation, but tone the intestinal muscles so that they learn again to work without help. A bottle can be bought of any druggist for the small price of 50 cents, and there is a dollar size for families who have already found out its wonderful value in stomach, liver and bowel troubles, in old or young.

Send your name and address to the doctor and a free trial bottle will be sent you so that you can test it before buying.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

A Cure for Hog Cholera.

Hog Cholera or Swine Plague as it is sometimes called is a highly contagious disorder.

When a hog shows any symptoms of this disease, he should be isolated at once and the pen fumigated in order to save the other hogs if possible.

Mix one part Sloan's Liniment with two parts milk in a bottle and give every sick hog a tablespoonful of this mixture night and morning for three days. Sloan's Liniment is a powerful antiseptic, kills the disease germs, soothes all inflammation and acts as a tonic to the animal.

A. J. McCarthy, of Idaville, Ind., says: "My hogs had hog cholera three days before we got Sloan's Liniment, which was recommended to me by a neighbor who was using it with success. I have used it now for three days and my hogs are almost well. One hog died before I got the Liniment, but I have not lost any since."

Mr. G. W. Balsbaugh, of Peru, Ind., writes: "I had four pigs that were coughing and were not doing well. I gave them some of Sloan's Liniment and they got better at once."

Sloan's book on Horses, Cattle, Hogs and Poultry sent free. Address Dr. Earl S. Sloan, Boston, Mass.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

PURPOSE OF CHRISTIANITY.

By Rev. Frank G. Smith, D. D.

"And this they did, not as we had hoped, but first gave of their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God."—II. Cor. 8: 5.

The supreme purpose of Christians, and of the Christian church, is or should be, to take away the sin of the world. How true is this of the church in general and how true is it of our particular church and how true is it of our individual Christian lives? Is it the great central thing in our endeavors? Is all else subordinate to this great divine purpose? Is there a mighty hunger in the heart of the church in general and in the heart of our church in particular and in the hearts of all of us as Christians this morning to take away the sin of the world? Or have we fallen into a kind of conventional faith that has not in it the vitality of propagation? Which is the greater motive in the Christian church and in the Christian heart to-day, to take away the sin of the world or to keep away from the sin of the world? There is a vast amount of difference. Is it the great object of the Christian to-day to take sin out of the world or to keep out of sin in the world? Whatever we may hold in theory, in actual practice I believe a vast majority of us as Christians are concerned, not so much in taking away the sin of the world, but in keeping away from the sin of the world, and many of us, I fear, are not working very hard at that even.

Now these are serious questions; they affect the future of every church just as certainly as the sun affects the growth of a plant. I believe that, in theory, at least, the church still holds that its business is to redeem the world; to take away the sin of the world. Now if that be true let us look for a moment upon the tremendous task that is ours. Some of the specific things we must do.

First of all, we must drive deceit out of the world; we must drive it out of our hearts and lives; out of our homes; out of our business; out of our social relationships; how thoroughly it has entrenched itself and woven itself into the very fabric of life; it must go; God desireth truth in the inward parts and that means clear to the bottom of a man's life; his kingdom can come in no other way; it is built upon no other foundation. Then again, here are our cities to be cleaned up; to be made whole. The great city of America to-day is an entirely modern institution; there has been nothing like it in the history of the world; the cities of the old world are the product of centuries of slow growth, but here in America under the whip and spur of steam and electricity great cities have sprung into being as if by magic, and the crowding into those great cities of millions of people from every country and every clime, due to causes that are entirely modern and did not exist a century ago, this, I say, has created conditions and offered opportunities for vice and crime and graft and greed that are unprecedented. These cities must be made clean; we must learn how to live together and live righteously and sweetly and cleanly and unselfishly. Every question that concerns the city's life must be looked at from the moral standpoint. Here is a tremendous task worthy of the heroism of great souls. How are we Christians solving it? By moving out to the suburbs; keeping away from the sin of the world instead of taking away the sin of the world. And here again are all the injustices of the industrial world on both sides of the question; on the side of labor and on the side of capital; the unfairness, the bitterness, the strife, the malice, the hatred, these must all be adjusted, righteously and happily adjusted. And here is the great heathen world to convert to Christianity. It is absolutely necessary that this be done, for every country is controlled, not by its army and its navy, but by its educational institutions; not by its governmental policy, but by its religion; down underneath government, industry, education, social customs, domestic habits and everything else we find the religious ideas of a nation. There is not a thing in China or India or Africa or any other bit of pagan country that you know of that mars it and makes it a place where you would not want to live but that it has its roots in the religious ideas of that country. Man after all is hopelessly religious, and it is religion that governs the world, and if you want to exalt a nation give it a clearer vision of God and of his will and purpose for man and of man's relation to him and to his fellow man. You must cleanse the fountain if you would make pure the streams, and a nation's religious ideas constitute the very fountain of its life. These heathen worlds must be converted to the clearer, sweeter vision of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. And here is the great inertia of indifference to be overcome. That in itself is a tremendous problem; I do not know of anything in connection with Christian work in the city that is more difficult and more heartbreaking than just the phlegmatic indifference of people whose lives should be all ablaze with enthusiasm for the coming of the kingdom of God. Now, if the great business of the Christian church is to "seek and to save that which is lost;" if it is to "take away the sin of the world," and not merely to "keep away from the sin of the world," then here are these great problems before her, and some others perhaps we might catalogue did time permit; but here are these—the driving out of deceit and the bringing in of the region of truth, truth in the inward parts, and not merely on the outward surface, the cleansing of our great modern cities from the power and pollution of sin, the righteous adjustment of the industrial injustices and differences, the conversion of the heathen world and the overcoming of the powerful inertia of indifference in the lives of those who ought to be ablaze with enthusiasm in the service of their Lord and Master. These are vast undertakings; they call for supreme faith and undaunted heroism.

Now, the question is how is it all to be done; what is the divine program for accomplishing these great ends? There is a right way and a wrong way to go about it, and the marvel is that after almost nineteen centuries of clear teaching as to the right way we should continuously be drifting into the wrong way for accomplishing these vast ends and bringing in the reign of the kingdom of God. Let us look at the wrong way for just a moment in order that we may see more clearly the right way. The wrong way is simply to tell the world in cold, denunciatory, belligerent tones what it ought to do; to stand either in the pulpit or the marketplace and with a frown on our faces tell men they must stop lying, must stop deceiving, must stop vicious practices that debauch the public morality, must stop industrial injustices that cause great islands of wealth to rise beneath a chosen few in the midst of a sea of poverty; to tell the heathen worlds coldly and unsympathetically that they must throw aside their idols and their superstitions and adopt our religious ideas; to tell the great indifferent world that it is its duty to wake up; to continually cry aloud in a nagging, whining, imprecatory tone against all the wrongs Christianity ought to correct, is the wrong way to accomplish this great work; it will never do any good, but, upon the other hand, it will do positive harm. It will never bring to solution the problem. Simply to tell a man in a superior way that it is his duty to do a certain thing scarcely ever impels him to do it; perhaps he does not feel that it is his duty; then to tell him he ought to feel it, or he is not a Christian, is simply no argument at all. By what power or what method or what law, then, are we going to impel Christian people to the accomplishment of these great tasks; to enter these great open doors of opportunity; to the acceptance of these vast responsibilities? How are we going to send a thrill through the great Christian army that shall send it forth a conquering host to the mighty task of bringing in the reign of righteousness and peace and love and good-will to men? How are we going to inspire the hearts of our own division of this great army to lift up the banner of the cross and literally conquer this community for Jesus Christ, and rear here a temple for his worship and service that shall be an abiding and enduring force in this city's life for all time to come? How are we going to send a thrill of power through the splendid machinery we have created through the centuries that shall set it definitely and effectively to work to the accomplishment of the splendid work for which it has been created? How are the funds to carry on our great missionary enterprises to be secured without eternal and everlasting shamefaced begging? What is the method by which the whole splendid Christian machinery can be set in motion in accord with the great ideals and the overmastering mission of the Master?

I am aware that great enterprises cannot be carried forward without splendid financial support, but if we place the emphasis on that side of our work only, if we make of the church only a great collection agency, a solicitor of funds, we will eventually defeat the very ends for which it was born. You deacons and trustees of this church, do you want to make it the most signally aggressive force for righteousness in this city? Then let me talk to you a moment; the prevailing impression the world seems to have of a deacon in these days is that his business is to pass the contribution box and of a trustee that his business is to see that there is something for the deacon to collect in his box. Do you want to destroy that impression in this community, at least; then you get together; there are nineteen of you; take unto yourselves a few more well-known stalwart men of the congregation, making a group of thirty or forty, and you determine that you are going to know every man in the church as a brother, and you add to your list besides one or two men outside the church that you are going to try to interest in the church and its work; you go forth resolutely with that lofty ideal and within a year all your financial problems will be wiped off of the face of the map and you will be in the midst of a most glorious spiritual awakening not only in the church, but in the community at large. This same law will hold good in the Missionary Society and in the Christian Endeavor Society, and in the Sunday school and everywhere. Out of the heart are the issues of life; warm the hearts of people by your brotherliness and your sisterliness and your Christlikeness and you will be amazed at the riches of every kind and character that will unfold from these lives.

Smiles of The Day

Tonsorial Philosophy.

"You seem to have a lot of confidence in mankind," said the victim in the chair.

"Not necessarily," rejoined the knight of the whisker knife. "I merely take men at their face value."

His Whereabouts.

"What became of that young man who sought your hand in marriage at the seashore last summer?" asked the dear girl who had been abroad.

"Oh," replied the fair one who had remained at home. "I have him under my thumb now."

His Finish.

"Give woman the credit she deserves," the suffragette cried, "and where would man be?"

"If she got all the credit she wanted, he'd be in the poor house," sneered a coarse person in the rear of the hall.—Stray Stories.

A Disgrace to the Class.

Percy—No, Clawrence is not in ouah set any longah. The vulgah fellow wears ready-made clothes.

Mortimr—Ready-made clothes are doocid vulgah.

Percy—Not only that, but you have to pay cawsh for them. That's doocid doocidly vulgah, bah Jove.

A Certainty.

Rich Uncle—You might as well stop mooning about Miss Beauty. She hasn't been in love with you after all. She's been after the money she thought you would inherit from me.

Nephew—Impossible! Why do you think so?

Rich Uncle—I have proposed to her myself and been accepted!—Tit-Bits.

Heavy Tones.

Old Man—My little man you'll catch cold if you get your feet wet in that puddle.

Kid—Dat's what I'm after. I got to speak some Shakespeare in school to-morrow and I wants to make my voice hoarse.

At the Wayside Inn.

Waiter (new but loyal—Yessir; often. The general used to be very fond of our 40-cent table d'hote.—Puck.

Horrors of War.

Miss Gush—Colonel, were you ever in many tight places during the last unpleasantness.

A Recipe.

"Whenever I try to make a speech everybody laughs."

"I know how to fix that."

"How?"

"Try to say something funny."—Cleveland Leader.

Felt He Was Intruding.

"Is your mistress in?"

"Yes; but she can't be disturbed. She's playing whist."

"Ah, I understand. Well, another time will do. I only came to tell her that her little boy fell into the river."

Bobby's Idea.

Bessie—Oh, look, Bobby, there is a taxicab broken down in the street. Do you think they'll send for a blacksmith?

Bobby—No, I guess they will send for a taxidermist.

An Insinuation.

Stella—I said something to Jack last night that he declared made him the happiest man on earth.

Mabel—Indeed! But aren't you aware this isn't leap year?

Conditional.

Him—How long should a man know a girl before he proposes to her?

The Threat Terrible.

Heiress—But, father, that handsome foreign count says he will do something terrible and awful if I do not marry him.

Father—He will. He will have to go to work.—Cornell Widow.

Might Have Been Worse.

"Those apples you sent up," said Bilkins, "were not half bad.

"I'm glad you liked them," rejoined the grocer, cheerfully.

"Yes," continued Bilkins, "only about a third of them were bad."

"No Fishin' Here."

Boarder—I've fished in your old pond for three days and haven't had a bite. What does that sign, 'No fishin' Here,' mean, anyway.

Hiram—Just what it says, sir—'no fish-in here.'"—Boston Herald.

Discouragement.

"So you have bought a horse?"

"Yes. The doctor said riding would give me an appetite."

"Does it?"

"Certainly. But what's the use? By the time I get through feeding the horse I can't afford to eat."—Washington Star.

Filled the Bill.

Book Agent—Madam, here is an admirable work I have on how to manage servants.

Housewife—Don't want it. You can't get any help in this town to manage.

Book Agent—Then here is a still better series on self help.—Baltimore American.

No Great Loss.

"Now, Mr. Knox," said the professor of physiology, "can you tell me with what faculty a man could most easily dispense?"

"Yes, sir," answered the student.

"Good," said the professor. "Which one?"

"The college faculty," replied young Knox, soberly.

Advance Information.

Shortleigh—Is Miss Scaddsby in?

The Maid—No, sir.

Shortleigh—When she comes in, will you tell her that I called?

The Maid—If you wish it—but she knows it already, sir.

An Inference.

Miss Oldham—I had a proposal of marriage last night.

Miss Young—Indeed! Who taught you the art?

Miss Oldham—The art?

Miss Young—Yes, of hypnotism.

He—Would you you advise me to complete it by going abroad or by getting married?

Good Neighbors.

"Have you good neighbors where you live?"

"I should say I have. One of them owns a naphtha launch and the other one an automobile. They entertain me all summer long."

An Unfounded Rumor.

"Mrs. Muchmore told me," said Mrs. Oldcastle, "that the new minister came in his vestments when he officiated at your daughter's wedding."

"It ain't true," replied her hostess as she flung one of her ropes of pearls over the back of a $30 rocking chair; "we brought him over in our limousine."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Needless Trouble.

"Did you wash the fish?" a Springfield woman asked her new servant. "Shure, an' phwat's the use of wash'n anything that's always lived in the water?" asked the girl.—Kansas City Star.

Different.

"Pa, were you always a good boy?"

"Yes, Tommy—a much better boy than you are."

"But gran'ma says she used to spank you."

"Y—yes. Your grandma never understood me."

One Man's Way.

The Lowly One—And were you born great?

The Great One—No; I thrust myself upon it.

Not Suitable.

She—Try this delightful cough candy.

FEARED AN OPERATION.

Found a Wonderful Cure Without It.

James Greenman, 142 East Front street, Ionia, Mich., says: "What I suffered during the worst sieges of kidney trouble, I can never express. It was nothing short of torture. In bed for three months, with terrific pain in my back, an awful urinary weakness, dizziness, nervousness and melancholy. I rapidly lost 45 pounds. My doctor advised an operation, but I would not submit to it. Gravel was forming and the urine had almost stopped. I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and after taking one box passed a stone half an inch long. I kept on taking the pills and passed smaller stones one after another until forty had been ejected. I recovered rapidly then and was soon as well as ever."

Too Great a Strain.

Every once in a while the actor while taking the part of a dude in a play would spend large sums of his stage money. On one of these occasions it seemed too much for a certain person in the audience, when a voice rang shrill and clear through the house: "Hey, Bill, how about that five you owe me?"

Eastern Colorado offers the best inducements to settlers at the present time of any part of the country. Land equal to that in the older states can now be had from $10.00 to $20.00 per acre. Crops of all kinds that are raised further east are raised there. Hundreds of farmers in the older states are selling their high priced lands, and investing where the prices are advancing rapidly. Lincoln County is one of the best Agricultural Counties in the state. W. S. Pershing of Limon, the County Surveyor, who has surveyed the lands for the U. P. Railroad and the Government for the last twenty years, is familiar with the whole country, and is assisting many to secure good locations. No part of the country offers better inducements to settlers or investors at the present time than Eastern Colorado.

The Boy Was Going Some.

A novel experiment to demonstrate the practicability of a pneumatic carrier was recently tried in Chicago. The "parcel" shot through a short length of the sample tube was a 13-year-old boy. He traveled at the rate of 16 miles an hour, and was in no way the worse for the journey.

OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Adrian, Ga.—"I suffered untold misery from a female weakness and disease, and I could not stand more than a minute at a time. My doctor said an operation was the only chance I had, and I dreaded it almost as much as death. One day I was reading how other women had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and decided to try it. Before I had taken one bottle I was better, and now I am completely cured."—LENA V. HENRY, Route No. 3, Adrian, Ga.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

TORE HIS SKIN OFF

In Shreds—Itching Was Intense—Sleep Was Often Impossible—Cured by Cuticura in 3 Weeks.

"At first an eruption of small pustules commenced on my hands. These spread later to other parts of my body, and the itching at times was intense, so much so that I literally tore the skin off in shreds in seeking relief. The awful itching interfered with my work considerably, and also kept me awake nights. I tried several doctors and used a number of different ointments and lotions, but received practically no benefit. Finally I settled down to the use of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, with the result that in a few days all itching had ceased and in about three weeks' time all traces of my eruption had disappeared. I have had no trouble of this kind since. H. A. Krutskoff, 5714 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., November 18 and 28, 1907."

FIGHT WITH DEVILFISH.

Experience of a Fishing Party on a Mexican River.

A party of English fishermen had an unusual and most exciting experience in the Panuco River recently with a large sting ray or devilfish. It is very rarely that these fish are seen in the river, for they are supposed to confine themselves to the sea, although they are often encountered near the coast, along the south Atlantic and in the Gulf of Mexico. Occasionally a small devilfish is taken by fishermen near the coast of Florida, but their appearance in the Panuco River is something unheard of before.

The party of fishermen in question consisted of Captain A. Paget, Captain Molyneaux, Sir Charles Cost, Major Ramsden, Captain Robert Duff and Lady Juliet Duff, who were out in small boats in quest of tarpon when three of these monster rays were encountered. One of the boats being supplied with a small harpoon threw it into the nearest ray. The other boats came to the assistance and made fast in an effort to keep the first boat, which was fast being towed seaward by the monster devilfish, but the five boats and a launch which had come up in the meantime were towed down the river with as little effort as if they had been mere toys invented for the playthings of this queer shaped monster. After several minutes of the wildest excitement which has ever been experienced by fishermen in the Panuco they succeeded in dragging the monster into comparatively shallow water and were congratulating themselves on the probable capture of the great fish when the monster gave a mighty flop that threatened to engulf all the small boats, flashed under the launch, almost capsizing it, and succeeded in tearing out the harpoon and thus escaped. This fish is said to measure at least 18 feet from tip to tip of its wing shaped fins, or flippers, while the two others from the glimpse gained were nearly the same size.—Tampico Cor. Mexican Herald.

OVER THE FENCE.

Neighbor Says Something.

The front yard fence is a famous council place on pleasant days. Maybe to chat with some one along the street, or for friendly gossip with next door neighbor. Sometimes it is only small talk, but other times neighbor has something really good to offer.

An old resident of Baird, Texas, got some mighty good advice this way once.

He says:

"Drinking coffee left me nearly dead with dyspepsia, kidney disease and bowel trouble, with constant pains in my stomach, back and side, and so weak I could scarcely walk.

"One day I was chatting with one of my neighbors about my trouble and told her I believed coffee hurt me. Neighbor said she knew lots of people to whom coffee was poison and she pleaded with me to quit it and give Postum a trial. I did not take her advice right away, but tried a change of climate which did not do me any good. Then I dropped coffee and took up Postum.

"My improvement began immediately and I got better every day I used Postum.

"My bowels became regular and in two weeks all my pains were gone. Now I am well and strong and can eat anything I want to without distress. All of this is due to my having quit coffee, and to the use of Postum regularly.

"My son who was troubled with indigestion thought that if Postum helped me so, it might help him. It did, too, and he is now well and strong again.

"We like Postum as well as we ever liked the coffee and use it altogether in my family in place of coffee and all keep well." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Joseph Butler, 44 years old, who lived near St. Wendel, was found dead in a field by his wife. Death was due to heart disease.

Elmer Gray, of Reiley, crossed his legs and locked his feet as he sat at breakfast. They failed to untangle when he arose and he broke his left ankle.

Isaac Hendricks, forty-seven years old, is slowly hiccoughing himself to death at Shelbyville. He was stricken with the affliction last week and since that time has been slowly sinking. Two physicians have failed to give him relief.

Charles Dinkins, a farmer who lives near Columbus, has a remarkable hen. Recently she laid two eggs in three minutes. That so overjoyed Dinkins that he was thinking of giving her something extra to eat, when the hen turned and picked holes in both eggs.

Xavier Daul, the oldest Mason in Indiana, died at the home of his daughter in Noblesville, aged 89. He was born in France in 1820 and came to this country in 1835. He joined the Masons at Murray, N. Y., in 1843, and was a member in good standing 66 years.

One of the few buffalo herds in the country is located near Fort Wayne on the Brookside farm, owned by John H. Bass. The owner is now rejoicing in the birth of a big, healthy calf, which is receiving as much attention as the high-bred horses and cattle on the place.

David Miles, aged 81, a civil war veteran, was killed at Fort Wayne, when a runaway horse dashed into him, knocking him down. The horse was being driven by Miss Alice Wilson, a prominent society girl. The young woman is in a state of collapse as a result of the accident.

William Lemasters of Shelbyville, was standing near the head of his horse when the animal suddenly turned his head, striking Mr. Lemasters in the mouth. His false teeth caused a painful gash in the lower lip and he had to be taken to a physician, where twelve stitches were taken in the wound.

Smith Crabtree, a bachelor living near Poseyville, died a few days ago, and before he expired he told his brother James he had some money buried back of the house. He left a note stating that he wished his brother James to have the money. After a search his brother found $500 in twenty dollar gold pieces in an old pot back of the house.

George Chamness, a farmer living east of Petersburg, was attracted by the ringing of a bell. Sometimes the sound was faint, other times loud and apparently near. He began wondering, when he looked up and saw a buzzard flying low. A bell was tied around it neck. Mr. Chamness believes this to be the famous "belled buzzard" seen in so many different parts of the United States.

E. A. Overman positively identified the land turtle caught by Schuyler Wolford near Tetersburg, as the one which his brother Jerry Overman cut his name and the date, in 1851. At his request the turtle was marked with the year 1909 and released. The fact that the turtle had not strayed from the old Overman farm for a half century caused those who saw it to wish it to remain another fifty years.

An article in an Indianapolis paper a few days ago, stated that a child born to Mr. and Mrs. Samuel White was the first Hoosier child born in the canal zone. About five weeks ago there was born to Mr. and Mrs. Hartley Rowe, of that zone, a baby boy. Both parents formerly lived near Wadena and went to Panama to live, after their marriage, a year ago. Mr. Rowe is a Purdue graduate and has a position on the canal.

The rooster owned by Mrs. John C. Leech, near St. Paul, which has been dubbed a mollycoddle, is dead. The rooster, from some unknown reason, drove a sitting hen off a nest of Plymouth Rock eggs and took hold of the job himself. He performed the work faithfully for several days, not even venturing off the nest for food or drink. When Mrs. Leech went out to see how the rooster was getting along with his task she found it dead on the nest.

While digging a ditch through a part of what was once known as the "Bear swamp," Benjamin Miller, Alfred Purdy and Homer Purdy unearthed the greater part of a skeleton of a mastodon. Then men were digging about thirty inches below the surface when they found the first large bone. Among the parts of the skeleton found were the lower jaw, one of the two bones from the foreleg between the knee and ankle, the bones of one foot, several ribs, several fragments of ribs, twenty-five vertebrae, two teeth and other pieces which could not be distinguished.

Sister Borgia, aged 54, Sister Superior for the past ten years at Sacred Heart Academy, Fort Wayne, is dead. She was formerly Assistant Superioress at St. Mary's, at Terre Haute. In the world she was Mary Scherber.

Harry Tyler, an escaped prisoner from the Indiana Reformatory, is under arrest at Fort Wayne. The sheriffs of many Indiana counties and the Indianapolis police have been chasing Tyler from place to place for nearly a year.

William Popple, mussel digger of Mt. Carmel, found a forty-two-grain pearl in the Illinois river and sold it to Dr. Pepper, a pearl buyer for $1200.

Two cats belonging to Gus Frank, Jr., a grocer in Petersburg, both have litters of kittens. A weasel ripped the throat of one of the kittens a few nights ago, and now the cats take turns guarding their young, one of them always being with the united families.

Edward Rigby, forty years old, was burned to death in the Brubaker dray line barn at Elkhart. The fire is thought to have been started by tramps smoking in the barn. Five persons were rescued. The loss on the building about $500. Rigby is survived by a wife and two children, who live in Homer, Neb.

Coroner Dewey, of Elkhart, was called to Goshen recently to issue a death certificate for Mrs. Woodson V. E. Messick. The attending physician was dismissed eighteen hours before Mrs. Messick died and Christian Science treatment substituted. Pneumonia caused death. The dismissed physician declined to issue a certificate.

Joseph D. Oliver, executor of the $60,000,000 estate left by his father, James Oliver, has filed his final report with the circuit court at South Bend. The estate, one of the largest ever settled in Indiana, was unusually hard to settle, for the reason that bequests, amounting to $26,000, left to neices and nephews and their issue, had to be divided among 78 persons.

Mrs. Charles Alexander, living two miles west of Petersburg, had been missing eggs for some time, and finally caught her pet cat eating them in the barn. She locked the cat in the cellar and forgot all about it until thirty-six hours afterward, when she discovered that it had eaten seven dozen of twelve dozen eggs she had put there. The cat was hanged.

John Warble, who lives west of Columbus, lost a horse valued at $200 last week, as a result of a snake bite. The horse had been turned into a pasture, where it was feeding, when it was seen to wheel suddenly, give a squeal of pain and run. A little later the animal became violently ill and died. Investigation showed the horse had been bitten by a rattlesnake.

Melchor Maurer, a Wells county farmer engaged in blowing out stumps went back to relight a fuse which had failed to explode promptly. Just at that moment the explosion occurred and the man was frightfully injured about the head and face. It is feared he will be permanently blinded by the accident. It occurred in the morning and it was nearly evening before the injured man was found.

LaFayette's famous artesian water well is running again. For two months the well was not flowing, and hundreds of people who used the water daily for its medicinal effect were forced to go without it. The city and the county have a contract with Robt. Kersey, of Lebanon, who is to keep the well running steadily for two years, at the end of which time he sells his pumping apparatus to the city.

Lake county has doubled its population since 1900, according to the figures compiled by the Lake County Directory company. The present population of the county is 76,454, while in 1900 it was 37,892, making a gain in the last nine years of 38,562. The majority of the cities of the county have doubled their population, and two of the centers of population—Gary and Indiana Harbor—hardly existed at that time.

The body of an unknown man, who was killed by a Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern train at Mitchell, 140 days ago, has just been buried. The body was held for two purposes, to identify the man if possible and to test the effect of a new embalming fluid made by a local undertaker. The body when buried was in good condition except that it had begun to shrivel away, the skin showing a slight tan color. No odor was detected about the body.

State Fish and Game Commissioner Z. T. Sweeney has issued a statement in which he says he will pay for the plowing and for the seed if farmers in this state will each set apart about one-quarter of an acre of ground and grow some sort of covering where quail may be protected from hawks and other birds of prey and from the elements. Commissioner Sweeney says the quail are rapidly disappearing in Indiana because the underbrush is being cleared out and wire fences are taking the places of rail fences, leaving no corners where they may hide. He says something must be done by the farmers or the quail supply in this state will soon be a thing of the past. Not one quail in five is killed by a hunter, he declares, the others dying from starvation or exposure.

A month after she sustained burns in a coal-oil explosion, which it was thought would not prove fatal, Mrs. J. C. Coss, aged 43, died at the Lutheran hospital in Fort Wayne.

Although James Thomas earns only $9 a week, at the Marion Steam Shovel plant, his wife Myrtle, in her petition for divorce, filed a few days ago, charges him with "squandering his money in riotous living." They were married November 23, 1902, at Columbus.

An Ancient Concrete Bridge.

In the south of France is a concrete arch bridge known as the Pont du Gard, which was erected in the year 56 B. C. The concrete in this was not composed of crushed stone or other small aggregate of the variety now employed in concrete bridge work, but was of the old style, consisting of alternate layers of large and small stones, gravel, etc., and of cementitious materials. Vitruvius describes the materials and methods in use before the Christian era, and other writers like Alberti in 1485 and Polladio in 1570 accurately describe the method which "the ancients" (as they call them) employed, "of using boards laid on edge and filling the space between with cement and all sorts of small and large stones mingled together." It is very improbable that the Pont du Gard would have withstood the rigors of climate of the northern United States, but its actual state of preservation, as well as that of many other specimens of ancient concrete work, proves that if modern work is honestly executed it will many times outlast any reasonable bond period, so that a very small yearly sinking fund per cent is all that is required for properly designed and erected concrete work.—Concrete Age.

Birds as Scouts.

During the night, July 2-3, before the battle of Sadowa, a division commanded by the archduke, retreating before the Prussian army, had bivouacked near a town in Bohemia facing north.

At midnight the archduke, when resting in a peasant's cottage, was awakened by the arrival of a gypsy, who insisted on seeing him personally, having come to report the advance of the enemy.

The archduke, who spoke Romany fluently, asked: "How do you know? Our outposts have not reported any movement."

"That, your highness, is because the enemy is still some way off."

"Then how do you know?"

The gypsy, pointing to the dark sky lighted by the moon, observed: "You see those birds flying over the woods from north to south?"

"Yes; what of them?"

"Those birds do not fly by night unless disturbed, and the direction of their flight indicates that the enemy is coming this way."

The archduke put his division under arms and reinforced the outposts, which in two hours' time were heavily attacked.—London Saturday Gazette.

LET MILLIMAN SETTLE

THE PAINT QUESTION!

THE Most important subject of the property owner today should be "Shall I paint and what shall give the desired effect?" Right now is the best time of the year, as there are no insects and bugs to spoil the effects. Some may say they can't afford to paint this year, but they should remember that A STICH IN TIME SAVES NINE, and painting at the right time is economy and the fact is they can't afford NOT to paint, and how often you are required to paint depends upon the kind of paint used. Our paint is a good one and is serviceable, being ground fine thus allowing it to spread more even.

Pure White Paint

In Paste or Ready Mixed

This paint we are selling to everybody and, as a result, we have satisfied customers. It is a paint of quality and is put up by experts. Ready mixed, ready to use. Saves time and labor. We have this in all tints. Appearance, wear and profection are the prime objects of painting. We give you all three.

Japalac

Easily Applied

The housewife's friend. It is the best and most durable finish every manufactured for use on either soft or hard wood.

Front Doors, Woodwork, Screens, Old Carriages, Refrigerators, Iron Fences, Porch Furniture, Etc.

Tints can be made with this as well as any other paint with same desirable effect.

Quickly Dried

Wall Finish

JEWEL WALL FINISH is a superior preparation of Kalsomine, made in the most skilful and practical manner for decorators and painters. It is furnished in powder form, disolves easily, jells nicely, flows smoothly and freely under the brush, and shows no laps. Jewel Wall Finish has excellent "body" and covers well; it may be tinted, blended and frescoed upon with ease, and will not rub off, rub up, or chip. Jewel Wall Finish will not injure brushes nor any suitable tinting colors, and will not settle or harden in the pail. Saves time, trouble, mistakes and waste, and insures perfectly satisfactory jobs.

Buggy, Wagon and Implement Paint

These paints are made especially for Buggies, Wagons and Implements where a handsome, preservative, quick drying durable Varnish Color Paint is desired. They come mixed ready for immediate use. Our Buggy, Wagon and Implement Paints are made for the purpose and should be used for the purpose intended. They will out wear any other paint and should be used in preference to a paint made for some other purpose.

We also carry the Neal's carriage paint in colors and they are ready for use and the explicit directions on each label enable anyone to apply them with satisfactory results. They are put up in "easy-to-open" cans, with a cover that may be removed and replaced as used.

Screen Paint

We are carrying in stock a black and green screen paint that can't be beat. When your screen doors and windows become shabby use our preparation and they will look like new.

Oil, Brushes, Etc.

We handle Aluminum and Enamel Paint, Varnish and Oil Stains, Paint Brushes, Sand paper, Putty, Linseed Oil, Turpentine, and in fact, everything that makes painting easy.

Adamantine Porch Paint

The porch floor needs attention as well as the rest of the house and when painting it you must have a paint that will withstand hard usage and exposure. Rain, snow or the heat of the sun in summer will not affect this paint and two coats will successfully protect your porch for years as well as beautify it. It is a paint with a reputation founded on merit. Ask us for colors.

We have a Specialy Prepared floor paint

It is the farmer that keeps things stirred up that raises the biggest crops. While we are having the rain get your little jobs done so that when the sunshine greets you once more you will be ready to stir the corn field to further orders. Don't lay off entirely because it rains.

Bad roads and scrubby stock go together. The farmers who set out to have better stock set out at the same time to have better roads, better crops, and more improvements and conveniences on the farm. And in a neighborhood where there are good roads, improved stock and farms, we find a development of intellect and a fuller, better appreciation of life.

Harry Kees and wife are in receipt of a commencement invitation of the Chicago Law School, the exercises were held June 6-7-8-9. Among the many graduates is found the name of J. Glenn Miller. He will be remembered by the St. Joe people as "Klondike Miller" having been raised in this community. We are pleased to note his success.

Facts and Figures

To the citizens of Concord Township:

So much of falsehood and misrepresentation has been used to induce voters to sign a petition for a division of Concord township, that we think a true statement of the condition of our school and school building is due the public. And then, if after this is given the people, they still desire to impare the efficiency and good work of our schools and add largely to the burdens of taxation necessary to support the increased cost of two township organizations and maintainance of divided schools, by dividing our township, we will say in all kindness, go.

The report that the St. Joe house has been condemned by the State Inspector, is false. On the contrary he has ordered the construction of fire escapes.

The truth is the house is in better, or at least as good condition as it was ten years ago when taken into the corporation of St. Joe.

The statement that we are in debt and have not the money to run our schools the coming year, is not true, as the following financial statement will show.

The May and December distributions are based on what they were last year and may vary a little from this statement, but cannot be much and is as near the actual amount as we can get.

We recently purchased four stoves at a cost of	$ 96.00
We have unexpired insurance	5.00
We have $100 cords wood, cost	130.00
Bal. from last year	234.24
Library and aparatus, cost over $250.00	150.00
Due on transfers and private tuition	175.50
May, tuition app	523.29
July State school dist	267.12
July Special dist	557.86
July Liquor and Dog Tax	14.86
	$2153.87
December Appor. tuition, dist.	$422.22
January, Appor. State	238.34
December, Special	427.07
	$3240.50

Last year it cost us to carry on our schools for eight months $2451.73. If we realize as much from the future distributions as we expect and have every reason to expect and our school does not cost any more than last year there will be a larger balance than last year. So that instead of our school being a burden to the township, the township will receive more than they pay out for our benefit.

Respectfully submitted,

June 14 Flag Day

Monday, June 14, will be the one hundred and thirty-second anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of the United States. On this date in 1877 Congress passed a resolution that the flag with thirteen stripes and thirteen stars be adopted, and at each incoming state a star has been added. An effort has been made in recent years to have a national observance of the day by displaying the stars and stripes on business houses and residences, and the idea is gaining in popularity.

An Eclipse Of the Sun

The eclipse of the sun is to take place visible in this country late in the afternoon of June 17. It will be a total hiding of the sun and is the first one since 1869. This latter event is remembered by many of our older people who speak of it as a time when the ignorant believed the world was coming to an end or that some dire result would be the portion of those on the old earth. The chickens went to roost, negroes fell to their knees and uttered supplication to the Lord, and the heavens seemed to be darkening never to light again.—Ex.

Hamilton-Tustison

The rural home of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hamilton was the scene of a pretty wedding, Wednesday evening, June 2, when their daughter, Violette Mae, was united in marriage to Lee O. Tustison. The ceremony which was simple but impressive, was performed by Rev. J. A. Brown of St. Joe. The couple were attended by Miss Joy Shutt of Auburn, and M. S. Domer of South Whitley. Mrs. Will Hamilton rendered the Lohengrin Bridal Chorus on the piano and continued with appropriate music during the entire ceremony. Following the ceremony, the usual congratulations were offered and a daintily prepared four-course wedding supper was served.

The decorations were particularly attractive; the parlor presented a profusion of white flowers, and the dining room displayed a tasty arrangement of American Beauty roses, carnations and smilax.

Thirty-five guests were present. Those from a distance were:- Miss Effa Wilson, Selma, Ind.; Miss Irma Rupley and M. S. Domer, South Whitley, Ind.; G. F. Hamilton, Alliance, Neb.; Alda Elson, Joy and Jennie Shutt of Auburn; Pearl and Lloyd Goldsmith of Spencerville. From these and also from the home relatives and friends, the bride received a number of valuable and well selected presents.

Miss Hamilton was one of DeKalb County popular school teachers but for the past year taught in the schools at Yorktown, Ind.

Mr. Tustison was one of DeKalb county's most successful teachers but for the past two years has taken up the work of advertising manager and since Jan. 12, 1909 was advertising manager of the Daily Herald in Dennison, Texas, which position he resigned to accept a similar position at Sterling, Ill.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Tustison will be missed in this community as they were social favorites, but they carry with them the best wishes of their many friends, to their new location where a bright future awaits them.

THE NEWS extends congratulations.

Harry Kees and wife are in receipt of a commencement invitation of the Chicago Law School, the exercises were held June 6-7-8-9. Among the many graduates is found the name of J. Glenn Miller. He will be remembered by the St. Joe people as "Klondike Miller" having been raised in this community. We are pleased to note his success.

Facts and Figures

To the citizens of Concord Township:

So much of falsehood and misrepresentation has been used to induce voters to sign a petition for a division of Concord township, that we think a true statement of the condition of our school and school building is due the public. And then, if after this is given the people, they still desire to impare the efficiency and good work of our schools and add largely to the burdens of taxation necessary to support the increased cost of two township organizations and maintainance of divided schools, by dividing our township, we will say in all kindness, go.

The report that the St. Joe house has been condemned by the State Inspector, is false. On the contrary he has ordered the construction of fire escapes.

The truth is the house is in better, or at least as good condition as it was ten years ago when taken into the corporation of St. Joe.

The statement that we are in debt and have not the money to run our schools the coming year, is not true, as the following financial statement will show.

The May and December distributions are based on what they were last year and may vary a little from this statement, but cannot be much and is as near the actual amount as we can get.

We recently purchased four stoves at a cost of	$ 96.00
We have unexpired insurance	5.00
We have $100 cords wood, cost	130.00
Bal. from last year	234.24
Library and aparatus, cost over $250.00	150.00
Due on transfers and private tuition	175.50
May, tuition app	523.29
July State school dist	267.12
July Special dist	557.86
July Liquor and Dog Tax	14.86
	$2153.87
December Appor. tuition, dist.	$422.23
January, Appor. State	238.34
December, Special	427.07
	$3240.50

Last year it cost us to carry on our schools for eight months $2451.73. If we realize as much from the future distributions as we expect and have every reason to expect and our school does not cost any more than last year there will be a larger balance than last year. So that instead of our school being a burden to the township, the township will receive more than they pay out for our benefit.

June 14 Flag Day

Monday, June 14, will be the one hundred and thirty-second anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of the United States. On this date in 1877 Congress passed a resolution that the flag with thirteen stripes and thirteen stars be adopted, and at each incoming state a star has been added. An effort has been made in recent years to have a national observance of the day by displaying the stars and stripes on business houses and residences, and the idea is gaining in popularity.

An Eclipse Of the Sun

The eclipse of the sun is to take place visible in this country late in the afternoon of June 17. It will be a total hiding of the sun and is the first one since 1869. This latter event is remembered by many of our older people who speak of it as a time when the ignorant believed the world was coming to an end or that some dire result would be the portion of those on the old earth. The chickens went to roost, negroes fell to their knees and uttered supplication to the Lord, and the heavens seemed to be darkening never to light again.—Ex.

Hamilton-Tustison

The rural home of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hamilton was the scene of a pretty wedding, Wednesday evening, June 2, when their daughter, Violette Mae, was united in marriage to Lee O. Tustison. The ceremony which was simple but impressive, was performed by Rev. J. A. Brown of St. Joe. The couple were attended by Miss Joy Shutt of Auburn, and M. S. Domer of South Whitley. Mrs. Will Hamilton rendered the Lohengrin Bridal Chorus on the piano and continued with appropriate music during the entire ceremony. Following the ceremony, the usual congratulations were offered and a daintily prepared four-course wedding supper was served.

The decorations were particularly attractive; the parlor presented a profusion of white flowers, and the dining room displayed a tasty arrangement of American Beauty roses, carnations and smilax.

Thirty-five guests were present. Those from a distance were:- Miss Effa Wilson, Selma, Ind.; Miss Irma Rupley and M. S. Domer, South Whitley, Ind.; G. F. Hamilton, Alliance, Neb.; Alda Elson, Joy and Jennie Shutt of Auburn; Pearl and Lloyd Goldsmith of Spencerville. From these and also from the home relatives and friends, the bride received a number of valuable and well selected presents.

Miss Hamilton was one of DeKalb County popular school teachers but for the past year taught in the schools at Yorktown, Ind.

Mr. Tustison was one of DeKalb county's most successful teachers but for the past two years has taken up the work of advertising manager and since Jan. 12, 1909 was advertising manager of the Daily Herald in Dennison, Texas, which position he resigned to accept a similar position at Sterling, Ill.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Tustison will be missed in this community as they were social favorites, but they carry with them the best wishes of their many friends, to their new location where a bright future awaits them.

THE NEWS extends congratulations.

He is going to Paris and Vienna, but further than that the details of the trip have not been arranged. On the eve of his departure Mr. Harriman was waited on by a special committee of the Albany Burgesses Corps, which presented to him a certificate of that famous old military organization. One of the requisites of the corps is that each member on parade must wear a huge black beaver hat, which is almost as big as Mr. Harriman himself. Other distinguished members of the corps are King Edward, J. Pierpont Morgan, Andrew Carnegie and Sir Thomas Lipton. Election to the organization is considered an exceptionally high honor.

Cracksmen Blow Postoffice Safes.

Burglars blew the two safes in the postoffice with notroglycerine at Newport, Ky. The explosions were heard by residents in the vicintiy, who poked their heads out of windows and went back to bed again, thinking the noise was made by workmen blasting rock. The burglars saw the heads from many windows and fled. In the morning the postoffice clerks found that the safes were blown and behind a thin inside steel partition in one safe there lay fifty thousand dollars in cash. The burglars failed to get a cent of booty.

TAFT OPENS BIG FAIR WITH ALASKA GOLD KEY

President Sends Sparks Across Continent Starting Pacific Exposition.

JAMES J. HILL WARNS NATION

Magnate Sees Danger and Pleads for Law Enforcement Instead of Law Making.

President Taft, in the White House, at 3:15 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, pressed a telegraphy key of Alaska gold and sent a spark across the continent that put in motion the wheels of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition in Seattle, loosed the waters of its fountains, unfurled its banners, started its bands playing, released showers of daylight fireworks, called upon the saluting guns of the American and Japanese fleets, set all the steamers in the harbor and all the locomotives in the railroad yards whistling and brought forth universal rejoicing from all Seattle.

Big Fair Is Complete.

The exercises at the world's fair grounds preceding the President's signal were carried out with military precision. The exposition gates were opened at 8:30 o'clock. At 9:30 troops from the United States army and navy, from the Japanese cruisers Aso and Soya and the State militia paraded through the grounds, under the command of Colonel T. C. Woodbury, U. S. A., and the column was reviewed from a stand at the head of the court of honor by exposition officials, visiting governors and Admirals H. Ijichi and Uriel Sebree.

The ceremonial exercises were held in a vast natural amphitheater sloping to Lake Washington. The program consisted of music, invocation by Catholic Bishop Onward J. O'Day, brief address by Director General I. A. Nadeau and President J. F. Chilberg, the long address by James J. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern board, and a benediction by Episcopal Bishop Frederick W. Keator.

Mr. Hill said: "There are four great words that should be written upon the four corner stones of every public building in this land with the sacredness of a religious rite. These watch words of the republic are equality, simplicity, economy and justice. They are interwoven with every fiber of the national fabric. To forget or deny them will lead to every misfortune and every possibility of destruction that rises now threateningly in the path of our country's greatness.

"Frequent use of the phrase, 'our complex civilization,' creates a vague impression that simplicity has been banished necessarily from the modern world by a kind of natural evolution. Whereas it remains now, as always, the normal rule of a wholesome national life.

"We have complicated our lawmaking until, despite the high standards, the unimpaired traditions and the continual labors of the courts, the administration of justice is difficult and sometimes uncertain. The greatest service to the nation, to every State and city to-day, would be the substitution for a term of years of law enforcement for law-making."

Taft Sends Message.

The ceremony of pressing the gold key in the east room of the White House in Washington by which President Taft to-day formally opened the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition was simple. There was a delay of fifteen minutes at Seattle in completing the arrangements, and it was 3:15 p. m. (Washington time) when President Taft touched the golden telegraph instrument. Practically the entire diplomatic corps was present. The message which followed quickly after the current that put everything in motion was as follows:

"The White House, Washington, June 1, 1909.——Mr. J. E. Chilberg, President Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, Wash.

"I congratulate you and your associates on this auspicious opening of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, and I congratulate the people of the great Northwest on the courage and enterprise they have shown in bringing it forth. The exposition, designed as it is to exploit the natural resources and marvelous wealth of Alaska and the development of trade and commerce on the Pacific slope, should appeal not only to the people of the West but to the people of the country at large. I trust it will fully meet the expectations of those to whose untiring energies it owes its birth and that it will prove a source of instruction and education to its thousands of visitors. WILLIAM H. TAFT."

President Taft and Senator Piles then made brief addresses.

Wheat Crop Is Promising.

Conditions are greatly improved in the wheat belts, according to a report made up at the Millers' National Federation, in convention at the Auditorium Hotel in Chicago. The report shows that on the whole a much better crop is to be expected than last year. The reserves are not more than half of what they should be, and this is what Patten based his prospects on.

BENSON AGAIN IN PRISON SHADE

Californian Convicted of Land Frauds Is Refused New Trial.

John A. Benson, whose prosecution for alleged land frauds has occupied the federal courts for several years past, was placed again in the shadow of a government prison the other day when the United States Appellate court refused him a new hearing of the case in which he was jointly convicted with Dr. E. B. Perrin of conspiring to secure subornation of perjury in connection with California timber lands. Benson and Perrin were sentenced to a year in the Alameda County jail and a fine of $1,000 each. Perrin was granted a new trial on a writ of error, and when Benson's attorney heard of the action of the Appellate Court he announced his determination to present a motion for stay of mandate to allow time for appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

LABOR LEADERS CONVICTED.

Madden, Pouchot and Boyle Found Guilty of Conspiracy.

A compromise verdict, inflicting a penalty of $500 each on Martin B. Madden, Fred A. Pouchot and M. J. Boyle, the labor leaders found guilty of conspiracy to extort money from the Joseph Klicka company, was Saturday returned by the Chicago jury in whose hands the fate of the three defendants had rested since Thursday afternoon. Before entering the courtroom to announce their verdict to the court the jurors had agreed among themselves not to talk for publication. Despite this it was authoritatively learned that the verdict was a compromise, growing out of a deadlock ballot which stood 7 to 5 for conviction of the three men. Forty ballots were taken by the panel.

On the principle that he has "scotched" the snake of graft "but not killed it" in securing the verdict of "guilty," State's Attorney Wayman has braided fresh quirts for the castigation of Madden and his lieutenants. As soon as it was announced that after forty-six hours of battle in the jury room of Judge McSurely's court the jury had established a record in labor cases in Chicago by finding a verdict of guilty, albeit by virtue of a compromise eliminating the penitentiary from the punishment, Mr. Wayman ordered Madden rushed to trial on another of the indictments standing against him and carrying a penitentiary sentence in the event of ultimate conviction. Furthermore, it was announced at the state's attorney's office that evidence will be presented to the Cook county grand jury with the object of securing the indictment of certain witnesses for the defense in the trial just closed on charges of perjury.

SIX SLAIN IN BLAST AT MILL.

Five Are Killed Instantly, While Another Escapes Miraculously.

Of eight men who were in the Geesey hoop mill in Dowagiac, Mich., when the mill boiler exploded five were instantly killed, one died of his injuries, one was severely hurt and one escaped without injury, although the entire building tumbled about him. Among the dead are Deforest Geesey, owner of the mill, and his brother, Frank Geesey. A heavy rain at the time of the explosion prevented the destruction of the ruins by fire. The explosion threw pieces of wreckage in every direction as far as forty rods.

PITTSBURG MILLS RUSHED.

Run Full Turn for First Time in Two Decades.

For the first time in two decades the mills of the Pittsburg district were run full turn Monday. The Carnegie steel mills and the American Steel & Wire Company, as well as other large concerns, did not permit mills in the Pittsburg district to cool Memorial day, and the attendance at picnics was visibly decreased. An official of the American Steel & Wire Company admitted that there had not been a time in years when the storerooms of the company were so nearly empty. The Carnegie Company also reports no stock in the warehouses. One concern in Pittsburg has orders for 100,000 kegs of nails for hurried delivery and has less than 10,000 kegs in stock.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

St. Thomas again defeated South Dakota University baseball, 6 to 5, winning the game in the ninth inning.

Berea college industrial school for negroes will be established at Shelbyville, Ky. Andrew Carnegie gave the school $200,000; Mrs. Russell Sage, New York, $25,000; Mrs. Henry Pickering, Boston, $25,000.

It was announced at Princeton Wednesday that W. C. Procter of the class of 1883, now of the firm of Procter & Gamble, soapmakers, has offered the university $500,000 if a like sum is raised for the erection of the new graduate school building on certain conditions.

At Charlottesville, Va., President Remsen spoke to the Virginia alumni of Johns Hopkins of the deplorable tendency to exalt the material equipment of our colleges. The rivalry between colleges for such elaborate equipment had evolved the begging college president, who was to be pitied.

Charles W. Eliot left the presidency of Harvard University finally and was succeeded next day by President Abbott L. Lowell. That evening the students assembled in front of Dr. Eliot's house and presented him with a clock in a mahogany case. After a short address the former head of the university for forty years led the students in a cheer for his successor. A retirement fund of $150,000 is being raised for Dr. Eliot by the Harvard alumni.

The latest attack upon alleged radical and revolutionary teaching in American colleges and universities is a series of reports now appearing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine by Harold Bolce, who made a secret itinerary of the principal institutions of learning, sometimes entering as a special student and at other places attending lectures. He asserts that in many classrooms it is being taught that the Decalogus is no more sacred than the syllabus; that the home as an institution is doomed; that there are no absolute evils; that democracy is a failure and the Declaration of Independence only spectacular rhetoric; that the change from one religion to another is like getting a new hat; that to social climbers children are incumbrances. Such is, in substance, the analysis of the writer's conclusions, given by the editor of the magazine.

Work of Congress

By the decisive vote of 50 to 33 the Senate decided Thursday to postpone until June 10 the further consideration of the income tax question in connection with the tariff. Two amendments to the sugar schedule were debated. One eliminated the Dutch standard test from the tariff schedule and the other lowered the duty on refined sugar from 1.90 cents to $1.82½ cents per pound. On the first vote eleven Republicans voted with the Democrats for the amendment, on which the vote was 36 to 47. On the second only five Republicans broke ranks, the vote standing 32 to 53. Porto Rican affairs were again thrashed out in the house, the remarks being based on the bill taking from the Legislature of the island certain powers now vested in it and providing for other reforms which it is designed to inaugurate. The action of the Porto Rican assembly in refusing to pass the appropriation bill was characterized by Mr. Douglas (Ohio) as revolutionary. The Porto Ricans had as their champions Messrs. Martin (Colorado), Garrett (Tennessee) and Larrinaga, their resident commissioner. Mr. Martin protested against the Porto Ricans being made the servants of "a carpetbag government."

-:—:-

The senate Friday adopted the remainder of the sugar schedule and the tobacco schedule as proposed by the finance committee. Mr. Aldrich agreed that the sugar schedule should be taken up again later if Mr. Clay should desire to press his amendment cutting the duties in two. Senator Bradley of Kentucky advocated the removal of the internal revenue tax on "tobacco in the hand.' Debate on the bill amending the organic act of Porto Rico was continued in the House. It was the expectation when the session began that consideration of the measure would be concluded, but the membership gradually dwindled away until there was no quorum, and final action on the bill was postponed. The principal speech was by Mr. Borland of Missouri, who upheld the Porto Rican house of delegates for refusing to yield its legislative rights and pleaded for a territorial government for the Porto Ricans. The House adjourned until Tuesday noon.

-:—:-

During two hours before adjournment Saturday the Senate made more real progress in the adoption of schedules previously passed over than has been usual during an entire day. In spite of protests voiced by Senators Beveredge and Root, the duty on barley was increased from 25 cents a bushel, as proposed by the House, to 30 cents a bushel. The tax on hops was advanced from 12 cents to 20. The duty on potatoes was made 45 cents per bushel instead of 25, and oysters in the shell were advanced from three-fourths of a cent a pound to 25 per cent ad valorem. The lemon duty was the subject of an extended debate. Mr. Root insisted that the rate of 1½ cents per pound, as fixed by the finance committee, was too high. Mr. Flint, speaking for the lemon growers, supported the advance, saying that the lemon industry of California would be wiped out if this duty was not granted. The schedule was still under discussion when the Senate adjourned. The report sent by the German government showing wages in Germany was the subject of extended debate for over two hours. Mr. Aldrich, disavowing any intention to be severe in his characterization, said that any government which transmits its own views or the views of its manufacturers to influence legislation on the tariff rendered itself liable to be regarded as "impertinent." After considerable acrimonious debate a message from President Taft ended the discussion, as it accompanied the very statement on German wages that had been discussed. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

In the Senate Monday the proposition to increase the duty on lemons from 1 cent to 1½ cents a pound was agreed to by a vote of 43 to 28. The House duty on bacon, hams and lard was restored upon motion of Mr. Aldrich, who withdrew the committee amendments increasing it. An effort of Mr. Bacon to reconsider the paragraph relating to fresh beef, mutton, etc., in order to decrease the duties on those articles was defeated. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

The Senate spent the day Tuesday in a discussion of the cotton schedule of the tariff bill. The most noticeable feature of the debate was a speech by Senator Lodge of Masachusetts, in which he declared that the Republican party had never promised "revision downward." Senator Aldrich gave notice that, beginning with Wednesday night, night sessions would be held. The House was in session only thirteen minutes, adjourning until Thursday without transacting any business.

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

A few days after Evelyn Porter came home, Wheaton followed Raridan to his room one evening after dinner. Raridan had set The Bachelors' an example of white flannels for the warm weather, and Wheaton also had abolished his evening clothes. Raridan's rooms had not yet lost their novelty for him. The pictures, the statuettes, the books, the broad couch with its heap of vari-colored pillows, the table with its candelabra, by which Raridan always read certain of the poets—these still had their mystery for Wheaton.

"Going out to-night?" he asked with a show of indifference.

"Hadn't thought of it," answered Raridan, who was cutting the pages of a magazine.

"Don't let me interrupt if you're reading," said Wheaton. "But I thought some of dropping in at Mr. Porter's. Miss Porter's home now, I believe."

"That's a good idea," said Raridan, who saw what was wanted. He threw his magazine at the cat and got up and yawned. "Suppose we do go?"

The call had been successfully managed. Miss Porter was very pretty, and not so young as Wheaton expected to find her. Raridan left him talking to her and went across to the library, where Mr. Porter was reading his evening paper. Raridan had a way of wandering about in other people's houses, which Wheaton envied him. Miss Porter seemed to take his call as a matter of course, and when her father came out presently and greeted him casually as if he were a familiar of the house he left relieved and gratified.

CHAPTER VI.

Raridan was at the station to meet some guests of Evelyn's, as he had promised. He had established a claim upon their notice on the occasion of one of his visits to Evelyn at college, and he greeted them with an air of possession which would have been intolerable in another man. He pressed Miss Warren for news of the Connecticut nutmeg crop, and hoped that Miss Marshall had not lost her accent in crossing the Missouri.

Annie Warren was as reserved and quiet as Evelyn could be in her soberest moments; Belle Marshall was as frank and friendly as Evelyn became in her lightest moods. Evelyn had been the beauty of her class; her two friends were what is called, by people that wish to be kind, nice looking. Annie Warren had been the best scholar in her class; Belle Marshall had been amongst the poorest; and Evelyn had maintained a happy medium between the two. And so it fortunately happened that the trio mitigated one another's imperfections.

Evelyn had discussed with her father ways and means of entertaining her guests. He preferred large functions. He wished Evelyn to give a lawn party before the blight of fall came upon his flowers and shrubbery; but she persuaded him to wait until after a pending carnival. The ball of the carnival was near at hand and she proposed that they give a small dinner in the interval.

"I'll ask Warry and Mr. Saxton. People were already coupling Saxton's name with Raridan's.

"Oh, yes, that's all right."

"I don't want very many; I'd like to ask the Whipples;" she went on, with the anxious, far-away look that comes into the eyes of a woman who is weighing dinner guests or matching fabrics.

"Can't you ask Wheaton?" ventured Mr. Porter cautiously, from behind his paper.

"If you say so," Evelyn assented. "He isn't exciting, but Belle Marshall can get on with anybody. I'm out of practice and won't try too many. Mrs. Whipple will help over the hard places."

Finally, however, her party numbered ten, but it seemed to Wheaton a large assemblage. He had never taken a lady in to dinner before, but he had studied a book of etiquette, and the chapter on "Dining Out" had given him a hint of what was expected. It had not, however, supplied him with a fund of talk, but he was glad to find, when he reached the table, that the company was so small that talk could be general, and he was thankful for the shelter made for him by the light banter which followed the settling of chairs. Saxton went in with Evelyn, who wished to make amends for his clumsy reception on the occasion of his first appearance in the house.

General Whipple persuaded Miss Marshall to tell a negro story, which she did delightfully, while the table listened. Southerners are, after all, the most natural talkers we have and the only ones who can talk freely of themselves without offense. Her speech was musical, and she told her story with a nice sense of its dramatic quality.

[illegible]y had their coffee on the veranda, [illegible] the lights from within made a [illegible]nt dusk about them. Porter's [illegible] was warm with the joy of Evelyn's [illegible]coming. She had been away from [illegible]o much that he was realizing for [illegible]irst time the common experience of [illegible]thers, who find that their daughters [illegible]ave escaped suddenly and inexplicably from girlhood into womanhood; and yet the girl heart in her had not lost its freshness nor its thirst for pleasure. She had carried off her little company charmingly; Porter had enjoyed it himself, and he felt young again in the presence of youth.

General Whipple had attached himself to one of the couples of young people that were strolling here and there in the grounds. Porter and Mrs. Whipple held the veranda alone; both were unconsciously watching Evelyn and Saxton as they walked back and forth in front of the house, talking gaily; and Porter smiled at the eagerness and quickness of her movements. Saxton's deliberateness contrasted oddly with the girl's light step. Such a girl must marry a man worthy of her; there could be no question of that; and for the first time the thought of losing her rose in his heart and numbed it.

Evelyn and Saxton had met the others, who were coming up from the walks, and there was a redistribution at the house; it was too beautiful to go in, they said, and the strolling abroad continued. A great flood of moonlight poured over the grounds. A breeze stole up from the valley and made a soothing rustle in the trees.

Evelyn and Wheaton heard the sound of the piano through the open windows, and a girl's voice broke gaily into song.

"It's Belle. She does sing those coon songs wonderfully. Let us wait here until she finishes this one." The sun-porch opened from the dining room. They could see beyond it, into the drawing-room; the singer was in plain view, sitting at the piano; Raridan stood facing her, keeping time with an imaginary baton.

A man came unobserved to the glass door of the porch and stood unsteadily peering in. He was very dirty and balanced himself in that abandon with which intoxicated men belie Newton's discovery. He had gained the top step with difficulty; the light from the window blinded him and for a moment he stood within the inclosure blinking. An ugly grin spread over his face as he made out the two figures by the window, and he began a laborious journey toward them.

RARIDAN STOOD FACING HER, KEEPING TIME.

He tried to tiptoe, and this added further to his embarrassments; but the figures by the window were intent on the song and did not hear him. He drew slowly nearer; one more step and he would have concluded his journey. He poised on his toes before taking it, but the law of gravitation now asserted itself. He lunged forward heavily, casting himself upon Wheaton, and nearly knocking him from his feet.

"Jimmy," he blurted in a drunken voice. "Jim-my!"

Evelyn turned quickly and shrank back with a cry. Wheaton was slowly rallying from the shock of his surprise. He grabbed the man by the arms and began pushing him toward the door.

"Don't be alarmed," he said over his shoulder to Evelyn, who had shrunk back against the wall. "I'll manage him."

This, however, was not so easily done. The tramp, as Evelyn supposed him to be, had been sobered by Wheaton's attack. He clasped his fingers about Wheaton's throat and planted his feet firmly. He clearly intended to stand his ground, and he dug his fingers into Wheaton's neck with the intention of hurting.

"Father!" cried Evelyn once, but the song was growing noisier toward its end and the circle about the piano did not hear. She was about to call again when a heavy step sounded outside on the walk and Bishop Delafield came swiftly into the porch. He had entered the grounds from the rear and was walking around the house to the front door.

"Quick! that man there—I'll call the others!" cried Evelyn, still shrinking against the wall. Wheaton had been forced to his knees and his assailant was choking him. But there was no need of other help. The bishop had already seized the tramp about the body with his great hands, tearing him from Wheaton's neck. He strode, with the squirming figure in his grasp, toward an open window at the back of the glass inclosure, and pushed the man out. There was a great snorting and threshing below. The hill dipped abruptly away from the side of the house and the man had fallen several feet, into a flower bed.

"Get away from here," the bishop said, in his deep voice, "and be quick about it." The man rose and ran swiftly down the slope toward the street.

The bishop walked back to the window. The others had now hurried out in response to Evelyn's peremptory calls, and she was telling of the tramp's visit, while Wheaton received their condolences, and readjusted his tie. His collar and shirt-front showed signs of contact with dirt.

"It was a tramp," said Evelyn, as the others plied her with questions, "and he attacked Mr. Wheaton."

"Where's he gone?" demanded Porter, excitedly.

"There he goes," said the bishop, pointing toward the window. "I dropped him gently out of the window. The shock seems to have inspired his legs."

"I'll have the police——" began Porter.

"Oh, he's gone now, Mr. Porter," said Wheaton, coolly, as he restored his tie. "Bishop Delafield disposed of him so vigorously that he'll hardly come back."

"Yes, let him go," said the bishop, wiping his hands on his handkerchief. "I'm only afraid, Porter, that I've spoiled your best canvas bed."

CHAPTER VII.

The following Sunday morning after church, as Wheaton reached his room he found an envelope lying on his table, much soiled, and addressed, in an unformed hand, to himself. It contained a dirty scrap of paper bearing these words:

"Jim: I'll be at the Occidental Hotel to-night at 8 o'clock. Don't fail to come.

"BILLY."

Wheaton tore up the note with irritation and threw it into the waste paper basket. He called the Chinese servant, who explained that a boy had left it in the course of the morning and had said nothing about an answer.

The Bachelors' did not usually muster a full table at Sunday dinner. All Clarkson dined at noon on Sunday, and most of the bachelors were fortunate enough to be asked out. Wheaton was not frequently a diner out by reason of his more slender acquaintance; and to-day all were present, including Raridan, the most fickle of all in his attendance. It had pleased Wheaton to find that the others had been setting him apart more and more with Raridan for the daily discipline they dealt one another. They liked to poke fun at Raridan on the score of what they called his mad social whirl; there was no resentment about it; they were themselves of sterner stuff and had no patience with Raridan's frivolities; and they were within the fact when they assumed that, if they wished, they could go anywhere that he did. It touched Wheaton's vanity to find himself a joint target with Raridan for the arrows which the other bachelors fired at folly.

Wheaton after dinner went to his room and made himself comfortable. He reread the Sunday papers through all their supplements, dwelling again on the events of the carnival. He had saved all the other papers that contained society news, and now brought them out and cut from them all references to himself. He resolved to open a kind of social scrap book in which to preserve a record of his social doings. He remembered a complaint often heard in Clarkson that there were no eligible men there; he was not sure just what constituted eligibility, but as he reviewed the men that went about he could not see that they possessed any advantages over himself. It occurred to him for the first time that he was the only unmarried bank cashier in town; and this in itself conferred a distinction. He was not so secure in his place as he should like to be; if Thompson died there would undoubtedly be a reorganization of the bank and the few shares that Porter had sold to him would not hold the cashiership for him. It might be that Porter's plan was to keep him in the place until Grant grew up. Again, he reflected, the man who married Evelyn Porter would become an element to reckon with; and yet if he were to be that man——

He slept and dreamed that he was king of a gream realm and that Evelyn Porter reigned with him as queen; then he awoke with a start to find that it was late. He sat up on the couch and gathered together the newspaper cuttings which had fallen about him. He remembered the imperative summons which had been left for him during the morning; it was already 6 o'clock. Before going out he changed his clothes to a rough business suit and took a car that bore him rapidly through the business district and beyond, into the older part of Clarkson. The locality was very shabby, and when he left the car presently it was to continue his journey in an ill-lighted street over board walks which yielded a precarious footing. The Occidental Hotel was in the old part of town, and had long ago ceased to be what it had once been, the first hosteiry of Clarkson. It had descended to the level of a cheap boarding house, little patronized except by the rougher element of cattlemen and by railroad crews that found it convenient to the yards. Over the door a dim light blinked, and this, it was understood in the neighborhood, meant not merely an invitation to bed and board, but also to the Occidental bar, which was accessible at all hours of the day and night, and was open through all the spasms of virtue with which the city administration was seized from time to time. The door stood open and Wheaton stepped up to the counter on which a boy sat playing with a cat.

"Is William Snyder stopping here?" he asked.

The boy looked up lazily from his play.

"Are you the gent he's expecting?"

"Very likely. Is he in?"

"Yes, he's number eighteen." He dropped the cat and led Wheaton down a dark hall which was stale with the odors of cooked vegetables, up a steep flight of stairs to a landing from which he pointed to an oblong of light above a door.

"There you are," said the boy. He kicked the door and retreated down the stairs, leaving Wheaton to obey the summons to enter which was bawled from within. William Snyder unfolded his long figure and rose to greet his visitor.

How It Sounded.

Since this is a confession, it may as well be a frank and truthful one. I am not jealous of my husband's first wife—at least I hope I am not. But when he looks depressed, or when I see that he is not as happy as I would like him to be, I am conscious of an uncomfortable doubt. I have tried to bring my sense of humor to bear upon this pain, too, and sometimes have succeeded fairly well—sometimes I have failed dismally. A trying trick that my dear husband has is that of sinking into an absent-minded reverie or abstraction; and he sometimes so far forgets himself to call me "Mary" instead of "Sarah." Once when he had been particularly forgetful and dreamy he did this three times in one evening. At last my resentment and appreciation of the ridiculous sprang to arms. With the fourth "Mary" I answered sweetly:

"In heaven, dear! Won't I do?"

I had heard of another wife who had done this, and it had sounded funny to me when I heard the story; but when I uttered the unseemly and unrefined speech I was overcome with shame, my anger fled, and, bursting into tears, I begged my husband's pardon, and I told him so.

"I am hurt," he said; "I had no idea that the memory of my poor girl, or that my thought of her, distressed you. Since it does, I shall be more careful in the future, my dear wife, and try not to talk of her."—Success Magazine.

TEXAS AND OKLAHOMA SWEPT BY TORNADOES

Village of Zephyr, Texas, Is Struck in Night by a Terrific Windstorm.

FLOODS ADD TO THE PERIL.

Series of Twisters in Oklahoma • Leave Two Towns Heaps of Ruins.

A tornado of great fury struck the little village of Zephyr, in the eastern portion of Brown County, Texas, at 1 o'clock Sunday morning and left a path of death and destruction seldom paralleled. The death list has reached a total of thirty-two, and the number of seriously and fatally wounded will reach fifty.

The storm formed half a mile southwest of Zephyr and swept down upon the village, cutting a path directly through the residence and business district. Nearly fifty houses were demolished. Lightning struck a lumber yard and started a conflagration which destroyed one business block. No effort was made to fight the fire, as the care of the dead and wounded victims demanded all attention. A section hand rode a hand car to Brownwood and spread the alarm. In two hours the Santa Fe Railroad was speeding a special train to the scene of the storm with nine surgeons and a score of Brownwood citizens. Hundreds of persons directly in the storm's path saved themselves by taking refuge in storm cellars. More than a dozen bodies were horribly mutilated. County Clerk Thad Cabler and wife and two children, who had gone to Zephyr to spend the night, were killed. The big stone school building and two churches were swept from the face of the earth.

Destruction in Oklahoma.

Fifteen and perhaps more persons were killed Saturday night in a series of tornadoes that devastated the Oklahoma towns of Key West and Depew. Forty or more are injured. At least ten were killed in Key West. Five are dead at Depew. The tornado swept over a wide stretch of farming country. Following the wind came a deluge of rain. Floods then added their terrors to the situation. The wreckage of Key West soon was overwhelmed by the rising waters. Practically nothing was left of the town of 200 inhabitants. Rescuers hastened to the place, but could not cross Salt Creek, which had become a raging torrent. A few inhabitants of Key West crossed the streat before the rise made it impassable.

Depew was destroyed by a double twister that was formed from that striking Key West and traveled in a northeasterly direction and another coming from the east. The tornado wiped out Depew, then pushed northeast, spending its force presumably a few miles forther on. Small tornadoes followed in rapid succession in an atmosphere that was very humid. They rose high into the air, circled about and dipped. As many as five were observed during the display. The little tornadoes had spent their force when the big one came at 5 o'clock. Preceding and following it were terrific rain and hail storms. The streets of Stroud and Sapulpa were veritable rivers.

Seven Die in North Dakota.

Seven persons are known to be dead, many are dying and over a score are seriously injured as a result of a tornado which swept over northwestern North Dakota. The storm was especially severe at Langdon, where the residence section of the city was practically wiped out, four people killed and twenty injured. The tornado demolished all of the buildings of the Jamestown Fair Association, the loss being $50,000, and several other large buildings.

MOBBED BY WOMEN; IS DYING.

Man Accused of Slandering Them Is Driven from Town by Victims.

George Englert, an English coal miner, died in Washington, Pa., from wounds inflicted by a mob of 250 women who drove him from the town of Manifold, three miles north. Englert, it is charged, had slandered women and girls, had refused to heed warnings to desist, and, it is alleged, dared the residents to stop him. He was saved from death on the spot by town officials who rescued him from the infuriated mob and placed him on a street car with orders not to return. Englert's wife, who had just been released from a local hospital following recovery from an operation, fainted when told of the affair and is still unconscious, with little hope of recovery.

KILLED IN QUARREL.

Wealthy New York Farmer Slain by His Neighbor.

Morris Donovan, a wealthy farmer of Clyde, N. Y., was killed by his neighbor, Beckwith Tremper. The killing occurred at the home of Tremper. He, Donovan and Fred Hart, an employe of Donovan's, spent the night in the Tremper barn drinking cider. A quarrel was started and the killing followed.

SENATOR BAILEY IN FIST FIGHT.

Texas Statesman and a Correspondent Have Mix-Up at Capitol

Senator Joseph W. Bailey of Texas and W. Sinker Manning, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, had a fist fight in the Senate corridor Thursday afternoon. Bailey used Manning's umbrella to wallop the scribe. Neither antagonist suffered any serious injury. The only damage was to the umbrella.

The clash grew out of an article in the Times under a Washington date line which said that Senator Aldrich, Republican leader in the tariff debate, had a number of followers among Democrats "who may faithfully be set down under the classification of 'Aldrich men'" and that "they are headed by that distinguished son of Texas, Joseph Weldon Bailey." Bailey read this story on the floor of the Senate and then denied the allegations. In making his denial he launched into a denunciation of newspapers in general and of the Times correspondent in particular, whom he specifically called a liar, a whelp and a coward. When Manning later met Bailey and started to explain that he did not write the article the mix-up came.

KANSAS NOW A LIQUOR SAHARA.

Bucket Shops Kicked, Streams Purified, Danny Dreamer Barred.

Kansas is as dry as laws can make it now. The new prohibitory law that stops the sale of liquors by druggists went into effect at midnight Saturday. The Kansas statute book appeared Saturday morning, and the acts of the Legislature become effective on its publication. All bucket shops in the State will have to close. The new labor law bars child actors from the theaters and all boys under 14 years of age from the messenger service. Interurban cars must be equipped with additional conveniences. Cities will be required to preserve the purity of the waters of the streams in their vicinity. Railroads will be required to erect hog tight fences along the right of way where farmers require it. Fruit tree agents will go to jail if they misrepresent the brand of fruit trees they sell.

HOOSIER BANKER ENDS HIS LIFE

Jesse Fletcher of a Well-Known Family Kills Himself.

Jesse Fletcher, a wealthy business man of Indianapolis, Ind., committed suicide at Turtle Lake, near Alpena, Mich., where there is a widely known fishing and hunting club. Mr. Fletcher belonged to one of the most prominent of the old Indiana families. For many years it has been important in the financial development of the State, and the Fletchers were among the first bankers to co-operate in the beginning of business in the Middle West. Jesse Fletcher was a capitalist and interested financially in many directions. The amount of his fortune is not known, but it is not believed that it was loss of money that led to his suicide. He was a man of middle age, unmarried and of retiring disposition.

FOUR IN BOAT PARTY DROWNED.

Swift Current Capsizes Launch Returning from Picnic.

Four persons were drowned and four others rescued from a capsized gasoline launch which was carried through the sluice gates of the dam of the Consolidated Water Power Company of Grand Rapids Tuesday night and dashed to the rocks below. The drowned: Anderson, Miss Bessie; Bogoger, Miss B.; Forse, Miss May; Anderson, Ralph. The body of Miss Bogoger was the only one recovered. The party went up the river to a place on Big Island, called Love's Nook, for a picnic. Upon their return, in attempting to make a landing and not knowing the gates of the dam were opened, the swift current caught the stern end of the craft and all were carried to the river below. Four were rescued and resuscitated after much difficulty.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

A slight increase in trading defaults reported is unimportant in contrast with the substantial progress which appears in the volume of solvent payments through the banks. Weather conditions being more seasonable, there are now wider indications of activity in production and distribution. Ample moisture and higher temperatures advance the crops satisfactorily.

Farm reports generally carry much encouragement, there being healthy germination in late seeding, larger acreage of corn and spring wheat and sustained high prices for the breadstuffs.

Movements of commodities mainly reach more extended bulk, although flour and live stock have decreased. Retail trade now shows better, the buying entering broadly into lightweight apparel, footwear, food products and furniture. Sales are also improving in jewelery, art and music wares and sporting goods.

Wholesale operations make a stronger exhibit in dry goods, clothing, woolens and men's furnishings, bookings for summer and fall deliveries comparing well with this time last year.

Railroad activities stand out conspicuously in both freight and passenger branches, and earnings of the Chicago steam roads contribute sustained gains in gross. Furnace docks disclose meager stocks of ore and an early settlement of the lake workers' strike would stimulate the vessel interests.

Bank clearings, $273,601,361, exceed those of corresponding week in 1908 by 26.3 per cent, and compare with $196,517,104 for five days in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 26, against 24 last week, 23 in 1908 and 17 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 8, against 10 last week, 8 in 1908 and 3 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Improvement is more in evidence this week, but irregularities in weather and crop conditions and ebb and flow movements in trade and industry prevent definite general characterization of the situation as a whole. House trade with jobbers and wholesalers is not usually active at this season, and efforts to attract business by clearance sales and liberal advertising have not been altogether successful.

There is a further apparent gain in the optimism with which the outlook for the more distant future is viewed, contrasting rather sharply with some of the reports indicating backwardness of demand for immediate consumption.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending May 27 were 205, against 219 last week, 263 in the like week of 1908, 142 in 1907, 127 in 1906 and 154 in 1905.

Business failures this week in Canada number 22, which compares with 25 last week and 31 in the same week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

Are the political squabbles and financial difficulties in Cuba merely the sounding of the knell of her fate as an independent republic?

It would be safe to venture the prediction that the suppression of the report relating to wages paid in Germany, submitted to the State Department and referred to the Finance Committee, has not been all the information "squelched" by the astute leader of the committee.

It is announced that Vice President and Mrs. Sherman went to Mount Vernon on Memorial day and placed wreaths on the tomb of George and Martha Washington. This is the first pilgrimage that has ever been made on Decoration day by President or Vice President of the United States for the purpose of paying tribute to the memory of the Father of His Country.

Announcemhnt is made that the Maine Central Railroad, following the example set by the New York Central on its Adirondack lines, has placed in service on its branches running through forest regions a number of oil burning locomotives. Evidedtly the company has reached the conclusion that it would be cheaper to use oil than to put out spark-started forest fires and pay damages for woodlands burned over.

The recent decision of the War Department to defer the retirement of officers found incapacitated for active service until they have taken accrued leaves of absence that may be due them, has again precipitated the question of the legality of such procedure. There seems to be a doubt as to whether under the law the retirement should not take effect immediately upon approval by the President of the findings of the retiring board, when an officer is found incapacitated for active service

Evidently President Taft has reached the conclusion that it is better to put up with the evils he wots of, in the shape of Republican organization headed by Senator Aldrich, than to trust the tariff revision to the tender but inconsistent mercies of the progressive Republicans plus the Democrats. Hence it is not difficult to answer the oft repeated question: "Why does not President Taft exert his powerful influence to disrupt the Republican organization and destroy the power of the Aldrich clique"? We shudder to think of a tariff bill in the hands of a disrupted organization—so long as it must be left in the hands of a party at all.

It is difficult to understand the attitude of Senator Aldrich and the other members of the Senate Finance Committe toward the report transmitted by the German government, and intended to show the cost of production in Germany of certain articles against which this country lays protective duties. It is not apparent that the German government was "impertinent," nor that it intended to interfere with legislation in this country, as these Senators seem to think. The German Ambassador maintains that his government was acting in good faith and on the supposition that Congress would desire just such information in carrying out the plank of tariff revision laid down in the Republican platform. To the lay mind it would seem that any authentic information on a subject so difficult and confused as the differential in cost of production here and abroad would be gladly received and seriously considered, making due allowance, of course for the element of self interest in those who offered such information. Evidently the Senate leaders do not see it this way, and when they find themselves in receipt of too much information prefer to suppress it for the good of the cause. As a matter of fact the crying need of the hour is a tariff commission which would supply precise information and enable this government to apply the protective principle scientifically and equitably. The tariff issue has ceased to be a party issue and the sooner the problem is dealt with scientifically the better it will be for the country

Editor St. Joe News.

Dear Sir: I wish to say to your people that the DeKalb Co. Board of Health has for several years worked faithfully to systematize and bring a complete and regular report of all births, deaths, contagious and infectious diseases occuring in DeKalb Co. To accomplish this we need the assistance of everyone. This we are receiving from every part of the county excepting the southeast part. From that pat there seems to be a neglect of duty in this particular work. I write this in hopes to call attention of those heretofore neglectful in order that it may be stimulative to their full duty without further demands.

Physicians and undertakers are especially urged to be more prompt. Burial of any human body over 7 years old without a permit from some health officer is a violation with a severe penalty attached and then a neglect to promptly make returns of burial is another.

Any neglect on part of parent or physician to promptly report all births, deaths or contagious diseases, is subject to severe penalty.

J. B. CASEBEER.

Option Law Information

It seems there are a number of things regarding the coming county option election that are not understood by many people. If the county should go wet people desiring to start saloons could apply to the county commissioners as at present for licenses. Such applications would be subject to remonstrances from the townships from which the applications come the same as was the case before the county local option was passed. So if the county should vote wet there would be saloons only in those townships where successful remonstrances were not filed. The law would permit the applying for license from the various townships every two years when the remonstrance expired. The county would remain wet in that manner for two years and as much longer as there was no election that reversed the decision.

Out of Business

The bum boat booze joint that has been doing business in the St. Joe River under Clarksville bridge has been closed by an injunction from Judge Killits' court at Bryan, Ohio.

Property owners along the river at Clarksville secured the injunction and the same was served by a deputy sheriff of Williams county. Judge Killits is common pleas judge and has full jurisdiction. The boat was pulled up the river about a mile and has suspended business.

The people of Milford township in which the boat was situated have filed a petition and will hold an election June 18th to determine the wet or dry policy of the township.

Mrs. Eliza Coburn Dead

(From Hesperia, Mich., Union)

After a lingering illness, Mrs. A. E. Coburn departed this life at Hesperia, Mich., on Friday, May 21. The following obituary was read at the funeral:

"Mary Eliza Coburn was born in DeCalla county, Indiana, January 10, 1859, and died in the family home in this village on Friday morning, May 21, 1909.

"On July 4 1881, she was united in marriage to Adelbert E. Coburn. Shortly after their marriage they lived in Newaygo county and have lived in this vicinity ever since. Four children, one son and three daughters were theirs, all of whom have been raised in this community.

"In very early life Sister Coburn gave her heart to Christ, and all the thirty years that she has lived in this community she has been just as actual in Christian work as her stregth would permit. In fact, often going beyond her strength in the service of her Lord and the people about her. Many is the person of this community who through personal experience of her many kindnesses rise up to call her blessed. No Christian work which was possible was too hard for Sister Coburn to undertake if she felt that duty called in that direction. It was her delight to do whatever she felt was her master's will. As according to divine promise, we shall be rewarded according to our works, hers will be a starry crown. We shall greatly miss her from our midst, but heaven will be the richer because of her spotless character and unfailing love."

The funeral service held in the M. E. church Sunday at 2:00 p. m., was very impressive. Mrs. Coburn made all song selections, scripture reading and text from which should be preached her funeral sermon. The songs were: "The Road Leads Home," "Tell Mother I'll be There" "Meet Me There." The text was "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Matt, 5:4.

All the children were present at the funeral, and a friend of Miss Frankie who came with her from Chicago. Merle from Grand Rapids, and Coral and Flossie were at home. The floral offerings bespeak sympathy and the high regard in which this worthy woman was held.

Rev. Johnson had charge of the funeral service, and the burial took place in the West cemetery.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL.

By Rev. John K. Hitner.

"But one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."—Luke 10: 42.

We are familiar with the history of the two sisters of Bethany, Mary and Martha. They were both pleased to have Jesus abide with them, and their home was His frequent abode.

While they both loved and doubtless believed in Him as the promised Messiah of the Old Testament Scriptures, yet there was a difference in them, just as now there are Christians and Christians.

Martha was active and busy—very much engrossed in all the outward duties of life, as we also see from other Scriptures than in Luke 10. Mary was more quiet and meditative, but with nothing in her of a fanatical inactivity, and no charge can be laid of her neglect of the ordinary duties of life. But when Jesus visited them, as on this occasion, she was more anxious to use the opportunity for her spiritual advantage, and so devoted herself to His company.

On this occasion Martha seems to call on Jesus to rebuke Mary for not sharing the duties of the household. But Jesus, with an emphasis, said, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful"; over-anxious, "cumbered," over burdened and worried, with these outward duties, with "many things" of much service, so that you are missing higher and spiritual things. You are engaged in such elaborate preparations for Me, so that you are losing higher and better things. But, "one thing is needful"; short work and but little preparation is not so much expressed here, but it is rather the basis of something loftier than any precept of economy, the idea of the usefulness of such elaborate preparations for the present life, of this life compared with another—"Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her."

The one thing needful, then, is not Christ, which would be derogatory to His divine being, nor religion, for both are living followers of Christ and trusting in Him, as seen in John 11. But, there is this difference between them, that Mary is giving more attention to the inward and spiritual, while Martha is engrossed more fully with the outward and temporal. While both are to a certain extent necessary, yet when opportunity is given, it is best to miss or omit the outward things rather than miss the higher and spiritual heart worship which will prepare for heart service. Such inward communion by prayer and study of the Scriptures will all the better fit for the duties of life and, so inspired with grace and strength, enable us to perform them more acceptably.

Is this not true with so many men involved in business to such an extent that they do not take time for spiritual matters, and therefore lack the joy in the strength for a higher and spiritual life? Is it not also true with some women that they allow domestic cares, or even some of the outward duties of the church, to interfere and take the place of inward and spiritual communion with God?

So what is here intended seems to be the need of a higher consecration of the heart to God and His service. The first and greatest commandment of all is to love the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and strength and mind.

Then again, we are told it is only as we search for God with all our heart that He will be found of us! This is the supreme duty that is so frequently urged upon us in both the Old and New Teastments and so often impressed upon us by the various providences of life. This is the duty practiced by Christ Himself, as He so often withdrew apart by Himself to commune with his Heavenly Father. This, too, is the promise that they who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. Is. 40: 31. And is not this the better part? Jesus answers how this is the better part in that "it shall not be taken away from her." Martha's choice of service was rather the mere outward and temporal, and would be taken away from her, for this outward service would come to an end and die with her. But, Mary's part being inward and spiritual, would remain with her like treasure laid up in heaven, and would continue to the further development of a higher spiritual life throughout the ages of eternity. So, while both were real and true disciples, Mary was more interested in the higher way of serving the inward and spiritual, while Martha was more absorbed in the lower of two ways of serving and honoring their Lord.

We need to meditate, to commune, to consecrate ourselves more fully to God, to be filled with His spirit through much prayer and more study of His word, so that we might daily grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, and thus be fitted for better service here and higher glory hereafter. Paul urges this same duty in his letter to the Romans: "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that we may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Thus the Master would teach us the duty and the privilege of a more complete consecration of ourselves to Him and to His service.

OMNIPOTENT FAITH.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed."—Hebrews, 11:3.

That is as true to-day as it ever was. Faith moves the world, faith makes the world, and it is faith that is ever making the world into new forms and leading it into new life. Nothing is done without faith. As one old writer reminded us long ago all works are just as dead without faith as faith itself is dead without works.

All men work by faith who work in any worthy way. The man who probably prides himself as being nothing more than a cold business automation, utterly indifferent to such visionary matters as faith and idealism, nevertheless works by faith; he pushes out his business into new fields in confidence that the venture and investment will bring its returns; his foresight goes beyond knowledge.

No matter how material in its nature your work may be, this quality must enter into it, the power to see beyond the thing you handle, beyond the immediate task being done, and far beyond the pressing circumstances which largely dictate present methods, into that which to-morrow will demand, into the promise of the future.

Living from hand to mouth is usually simply a matter of inability to see any farther than the end of the nose. Getting ahead in life is largely a matter of seeing ahead. Faith is the confidence in things that are not yet, the forepossessing of the things that are to be; it is the pioneer spirit that makes men push into new lands, attempt new tasks, and bring the world into new days.

The most practicable tools to our hands are the fruitage of faith. Here is the indispensable telephone at the elbow of every man because one man had the faith to follow his vision, persevered when others scoffed, and believed in the values where others saw only a toy. Faith is not dreaming; it is so doing as to realize our best dreams.

So religious faith means not something other than we know in everyday living. It means applying this spirit of confident endeavor to make real the hope for the future to the matters of the moral and spiritual life in the realm of character and ideals. Faith in religion means simply giving the life to the realization of religion's hopes.

Does a man say that he has faith in the most high, then it will mean that he has condence that infinite wisdom and affection are so working in this world that nothing better can be for him than to work in harmony with them and to bring that will which is right and truth and goodness to be done amongst men.

Faith in the infinite does not mean a blind baby-like confidence that almighty arms will pick us up and carry us to some fair land, unswept by storms and uncursed by the necessity for labor. It does mean so great confidence in the rightness of the whole universe that we put our lives into tune with it and follow the right.

There is nothing men need more than this faith, faith to believe that this world, whatever eddies of sin and wrong may swirl here and there, is part of a universe essentially right, where justice is eternally unchanging, where law reigns, where the will that is truth and right is being done, and, therefore, where one dare not do other than follow that confidence, where one must follow the right, though the heavens may fall.

We need faith in the possibilities of our fellows, to see the possible goodness in even the basest, to waken finer chords as we strike the note of love and confidence in them. Men are what we believe them to be and this is just as true of great groups of men as it is of individuals, a democracy is only possible so long as we believe that all the people, taken together, will do the right.

No great work ever had immediate results. Those who sow for the rich harvests must wait long for the ripening grain; weeds grow in a night, worthwhile things try our faith. Character is the finest fruitage of all. Its harvest comes not by observation, but it never fails to come to those who live for its high purposes in others and its heights of calm in themselves.

SERMONETTES.

Joy in religion is but another word for genuineness.

There are too many people trying to make the Bible popular by using it as a club.

It's a good thing to plan things to their end, but there's always danger of ending in planning.

To follow only the light of your own desires is to find yourself in the darkness of self-disgust.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't fail to note that great facts are due to great faith.

Don't get so close to the fcts that you cannot see the truth.

Don't think your heart is uplifted because your head is light.

Don't try to feed your soul when you are starving your servants.

Don't try to follow a fad if you would avoid a short cut to folly.

Do not shift the blame for sin, for such action does not uproot its showing.

Smiles of The Day

One of the Regulars.

During the encampment of several regiments of British soldiers in a certain district the wood and turf used for cooking purposes were carted by the neighboring farmers. One day a donkey cartful of turf was brought in, the driver being a country lad. As a regimental band was playing he stood in front of the donkey and held the animal tightly by the head. Some of the "smart ones" gathered round, highly pleased, and the wit of the party asked why he "held his brother so tightly."

The reply was crushing: "I'm afraid he might enlist."—Argonaut.

Just Had To.

Mrs. Bronson—I can't understand how the Browns are able to own an automobile.

Mr. Bronson—They aren't, but he's so hard up at present that he can less afford not to own one.

Looking Ahead.

She—And what did papa say?

He—He was very pleasant about it. He even urged me to have the wedding take place as soon as possible.

She—That's strange. Did he give any reason?

He—Yes; he said he thought weddings would cost more next year.

Investing His Profits.

"What are you going to do with the money you get for your crops this year?"

"I guess I'll git one o' these here centaurs I read about in a book to run the new carriage I bought last year."

"Why, a centaur is an imaginary creature."

"Well, this is an imaginary carriage."—Washington Star.

Monsieur Rouvier—A beautiful organ music I have heard this afternoon.

Mrs. Watkyns—Yes.

Monsieur Rouvier—It was indeed charming. I have asked somebody the name of it. What was it then? Ah, yes, I remember myself—"The Mislaid String."—Somerville Journal.

Ready for Hostilities.

Dinks—Why do pugilists shake hands when they go into the ring?

Winks—For the same reason, I suppose, that two women kiss when they meet on the street.

Proverbs Disproved.

"Then you don't believe seeing is believing?"

"Nix, I see lots of people I would not believe."

Matter of Shape.

Bosh—Isn't it queer that a printed sheet, although square, is called a circular?

Josh—Not necessarily; it is intended to go round.

Become Recruits for the Pulpit.

"That was nice of him," rejoined old man Short. "How did he come to say it?"

"I struck him for a quarter," answered Short, Jr.

Higher Education.

Little Willie—Say, pa; what is the higher education?

Pa—The higher education, my son, is one that teaches a young man that he must work in order to earn an honest living.

One or the Other.

"It is a good thing to hunger for fame," remarked the struggling author.

"Yes," assented his friend, the artist, "if you don't get the fame you are sure to get the hunger.

Mr. Wise—My boy's all right now. Dr. Emdee—My medicine cured him, eh?

Mr. Wise—No; he heard that the circus would soon come to town.

The New Cook.

Small Lady (looking rather nervously at her new cook)—Did you have words with your late mistress as you were leaving your last place?

The Cook (encouragingly)—Not in the least, mum. I locked her in the bathroom and took all my things and slipped out as quiet as you please!—Pearson's Weekly.

Real Fighters.

Rodrick—The war of the revolution was long fought, but our forces finally won.

Van Albert—Yes, but it would have been won six months sooner if the D. A. R.'s could have only been there.

Sensible Realization.

Quinn—Where is the young poet these days?

DeFonte—Doing well. Always has a dollar and wears a new suit. He's realized something.

Quinn—Sold some of his poems, eh?

DeFonte—No, realized that he is not a poet and got a job as bookkeeper.

His Scheme.

Applicant—Give me a position as proofreader—we'll get along all right.

Naming the Twins.

You have heard of the twins, Kate and Duplicate? earnestly inquires the Kansas City Times. So had an Arkansas mother of twins, who like the idea and wanted to adopt it. Her name being Kate, it was easy to name the girl twin in her honor, but Duplicate seemed hardly to fit the boy. This proved a stumbling block for some time, but after considerable discussion it was surmounted. In delicate compliment to the boy's father, who was a moonshiner, it was decided to call him Lubricate.

This story is just made up, of course, but it is as true as most Arkansas stories.

"Speaking of Easter eggs," said Mark Twain at a dinner at the Authors' Club in New York, "I am reminded of the town of Squash. In my early lecturing days I went to Squash to lecture in Temperance Hall, arriving in the afternoon. The town seemed very poorly billed. I thought I'd find out if the people knew anything at all about what was in store for them. So I turned in at the general store:

"'Good afternoon, friend,' I said to the general storekeeper. 'Any entertainment here to-night to help a stranger to while away his evening?'

"The general storekeeper, who was sorting mackerel, straightened up, wiped his briny hands on his apron and said:

"'I expect there's going to be a lecture. I been sellin' eggs all day.'"

SKIN WAS ROUGH AS BARK.

Baby Boy Had an Intense Itching Humor—Scratched Till Blood Ran —Found a Cure in Cuticura.

"Our son, two years old, was afflicted with a rash. After he suffered with the trouble several weeks I took him to the doctor, but it got worse. The rash ran together and made large blisters. The little fellow didn't want to do anything but scratch and we had to wrap his hands up to keep him from tearing the flesh open till the blood would run. The itching was intense. The skin on his back became hard and rough like the bark of a tree. He suffered intensely for about three months. But I found a remedy in Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. The result was almost magical. That was more than two years ago, and there has not been the slightest symptom of it since he was cured. J. W. Lauck, Yukon, Okla., Aug. 28 and Sept. 17, 1908."

A Case for Condolence.

Not all that glitters is gold, and not all who lean over the rail are seasick. One of the lessons of life is not to take too much for granted. However, in the instance mentioned by F. J. M. Smith in "The Hades of Ardenne," the sympathy was as genuine as if the object has been more deserving.

Night was falling as Daubiton paced the deck. One by one the passengers had gone below. One lady remained in the stern leaning over the rail gazing sadly over the sea. Daubiton could just make out her outlines in the dusk.

As he drew near her on one of his rounds, a heartrending groan startled his ears. He looked wistfully at the graceful figure shrouded in its long garment. He could make out the small head bent over the foaming water in exquisite feminine grace. If he could only help her!

Back and forth he paced. She was evidently suffering from the worst form of seasickness. It was sad to think of her all alone with no one to comfort her. Daubiton debated. Perhaps she preferred to be left alone.

The boat suddenly gave a roll and plunged wildly. There was a shrill shriek, followed by a terrible groan. Daubiton could stand it no longer. He went to her and spoke respectfully: "Can I do anything for you?"

There was no answer.

"She seems unconscious," he said to himself, and laid his hand gently on her shoulder. Then he started. It was no lady. It was a fender, and the groans were made by the chains which led from the rudder to the steering house.

MAKING SUNSHINE.

It Is Often Found in Pure Food.

The improper selection of food drives many a healthy person into the depths of despairing illness. Indeed, most sickness comes from wrong food and just so surely as that is the case right food will make the sun shine once more.

An old veteran of Newburyport, Mass., says: "In October, I was taken sick and went to bed, losing 47 pounds in about 60 days. I had doctor after doctor, food hurt me and I had to live almost entirely on magnesia and soda. All solid food distressed me so that water would run out of my mouth in little streams.

"I had terrible night sweats and my doctor finally said I had consumption and must die. My good wife gave up all hope. We were at Old Orchard, Me., at that time and my wife saw Grape-Nuts in a grocery there. She bought some and persuaded me to try it.

"I had no faith in it but took it to please her. To my surprise it did not distress me as all other food had done and before I had taken the fifth package I was well on the mend. The pains left my head, my mind became clearer and I gained weight rapidly.

"I went back to my work again and now after six weeks' use of the food I am better and stronger than ever before in my life. Grape-Nuts surely saved my life and made me a strong hearty man, 15 pounds heavier than before I was taken sick.

"Both my good wife and I are willing to make affidavit to the truth of this."

REVIEW OF INDIANA

James Hayden, Known over Union county as "Fiddler Jim" committed suicide by hanging himself at the infirmary in Brownsville. He used his shirt as a rope and tied it to a piece of timber. He was seventy-five years old.

Danville, with a population of 2,200 people, and with six hundred students in the Central Normal College, making a total of 2,800 people, there has not been a death since April 19, and only two since March 21. The records of the city health officer show that since the first of the year, practically five months ago, there have been only eight deaths out of 2,800 peoplee.

Orn Lenwell, who left his home in Sidney 24 years ago, and until a few days ago was lost to his family, was returned to his home recently by his son, Curtis Lenwell, and his daughter, Mrs. Tennant, of Larwill. During Lenwell's absence his wife went to North Dakota, was married and now lives at Bates, that state. Lenwell has not been told of his wife's marriage. When found he was in a hospital at Shreveport.

Ten poker players were arrested in a raid which the police made in Columbus on the cigar store of Dan Truax. A dispute was in progress at the game and one of the players said: "I wish the police would raid the joint." He had no sooner finished his remark than he looked up and the police were in the room. Another player declared that he would play his hand out, as he held some good looking cards. He was allowed to play the hand out and won the pot.

Six men and seven women and a dog made up a fishing party on Robb creek, near Hazleton, and the dog made the best catch of the day. "Don," a shepherd dog, searched several holes filled with water which remained from a recent overflow, and found in one of the puddles a large yellow catfish. After a few minutes vigorous splashing, the dog came out of the water with the fish in his jaws. The fish weighed twelve pounds. The others in the party caught sun fish.

Miss Eugenia Selby, aged 51, sister of Eugene Debs, is dead after a long illness. Like her noted brother, she was born and lived all her life in Terre Haute. The Debs family is known to older residents for the exceptionally affectionate family relation, their worldly affairs being of common lot among the children and parents. The father, who died not long ago, and the sons always embraced and kissed when parting or meeting, and the tenderness of the devotion of the children to the mother was beautiful. She, too, died not long ago.

If the advice of A. E. Peffley, of Churubusco, is followed, Cass county will become noted for more than its politicians, its Democratic majorities and its "wetness." It will be noted for its onions. Peffley known around Churubusco as the onion king, has been in Logansport for the past week and he has made an examination of Cass county soil. He says he has found much land which should yield anywhere from 600 to 1,000 bushels of silver skin onions an acre. He is enthusiastic and wishes Cass county farmers to go into the onion raising business on a large scale. He sees a fortune for them and will be back soon and talk onions to every one who will listen.

Tony Hetzner and family, who have just moved into a house at 176 West Eighth street, Peru, were somewhat excited when one of the children unearthed in the cellar a coffin. The top of the coffin was close to the surface and the child while digging struck the board top. Others of the family were soon in the cellar, some digging with the hope of unearthing a treasure box. The coffin was of an ancient type and contained bones and dust. Old-time residents say the neighborhood in which the Hetzner home is situated was the first cemetery ever in that loacility. Many years ago when Eigth street was cut through the cemetery scores of bodies were removed to what is now Mount Hope cemetery.

That an old hen will put up a strong fight in defense of her little chicks was shown at the home of D. S. Ellerton, south of Owensville, when a large chicken snake moved noiselessly to a point where the hen was standing with her chicks nestled closely about her. The hen was on the defensive before the reptile was aware of it. Clucking at her chicks two or three times, the mother waited for the snake to make the first pass. The reptile advanced a little farther and quick as a flash the hen sprang at the enemy in a manner that made the snake crawl for the tail grass. The hen continued the onslaught and the snake was driven out of the yard before the old hen returned to her chicks that were chirping with all their might as if applauding their mother's bravery.

William A. McNaughton, 58, head of the W. A. McNaughton department store in Muncie, one of the largest retail houses in the state, died after a lingering illness with cancer of the stomach.

Representative Joe Moss, of Linton, permitted an incision into his hip, and as a result a half pint of blood and matter were removed. Mr. Moss has been confined to his bed since he was run down by an automobile in Indianapolis

Henry Rumpf, of Sydney, has been chosen principal of the Waterloo schools.

Mrs. C. D. Hunnicut, of Economy, has six hundred incubator chickens large enough for market. They are worth almost a dollar each.

Alfred Guthrie, one of the wealthiest men of Lawrence county, and president of the Stone City bank, in Bedford, has divided one-half of $160,000 among his seven children. He is one of the largest land owners in the county.

A family reunion out of the ordinary was held near Greenfield, when the twelve children of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Shelby assembled at the family dinner. Thee remarkable feature of the reunion is the fact that in the fifty-five years the Shelbys have been married death has never visited their home.

The male of a pair of Mississippi wild cats belonging to Harry Britton, of Brazil, which he captured in the swamps of Mississippi, died a few days ago. An hour before the death of its mate the female began crying, and after its death the female screamed and tried to tear its way out of the cage.

Col. B. E. Walaice has told the Peru citizens' committee that it will be impossible to bring his circus home for the "home-coming week," to be celebrated by Peru in August, as the circus will be on the Pacific coast at that time. Col. Wallace will, however, place a huge banner in the main tent of his circus advertising Peru's feature.

W. D. Rinehart, a veteran engineer on the Midland, had an unpleasant experience last week. As he was bringing his train in from Ladoga a bird, blinded by the headlight, flew into the cab, striking him in the left eye. He was blinded by the shock, and the fireman had to bring in the train. A cut was inflicted below the eye, but no permanent injury is anticipated.

Linton is to have one of the biggest 5th of July celebrations ever given in that part of the state. Excursions will be run on all railroads. Among the sports of the day will be foot races, automobile races, discus hurling, shot putting, pole vaulting, association football, motorcycle racing and balloon ascension. The proceeds of the day will go toward building the new Presbyterian church.

Frank Gibson, 12 years old, and his sister Blanche, aged 8, were shot and seriously wounded by Williard Gibson, a 14 year old brother, at their home in Lafayette. Frank found a shotgun in a corner of the room. William loaded the weapon and it was discharged. Frank's left hand and arm was torn away from the wrist, and Blanche received a charge of shot in her high side. The girl may die.

John Blaize, a prominent farmer, near Petersburg, while playing with a shepherd dog, was bitten by the animal, which showed signs of rabies. The animal was killed and its head sent to Indianapolis for analysis. It is not known whether other dogs in the neighborhood have been bitten, but every precaution will be taken. Sheep valued at $85 were killed by dogs on Will Lamb's farm, just west of Petersburg, recently.

An exciting elopement took place at Otwell, when Edgar Traylor, son of Joe Trylor, a well-to-do-farmer, and Miss Fronnie Craig, daughter of Lawrence Craig, disappeared. Liverymen of Petersburg received a call to send to Otwell a carriage and a driver. The driver met the couple by appointment and brought them to Petersburg, where they took the train north presumably for some point in Illinois. Their friends had no inkling of the elopment until their parents missed them at the breakfast table.

Among the unusual patterns in church architecture in the pioneer history of Indiana, that of the original Friendly Grove Baptist church, in the southwest part of Clay county, built some time between 1840 and 1850, is believed to stand at the head of the list. "The House of Seven Gables" is familiar, but no one has yet written the story of "The House of Twelve Corners," suggestive of the twelve apostles. The main part of this primitive log structure was 20 by 50 feet, having a midway extension, or recess, of about ten feet on either side. Through these two small wings were the entrances to the auditorium. In one end of the auditorium were two old-fashioned fireplaces. To reduce the size of the auditorium from 1000 to 600 feet a section of the ceiling was so constructed and suspended by heavy hinges that it could be let down to form a partition, cutting off 400 feet. This church society was organized on June 28, 1839, under a large elm tree. The members met in groves and private houses until the erection of the house, in which they worshiped until about the time of the civil war.

Luther Mehring, of Indianapolis, has left for Bruceville, Md., where he will pay to a number of old creditors $5200. The debts are of forty years' standing but Mehring does not desire to take advantage of statute of limitation.

There now remain thirteen saloons in Daviess county out of the thirty-nine which were in existence on February 23, when the county voted dry by an overwhelming majority. Of the thirteen remaining bars seven will will close the first week in June Selfishness.

Prof. Charles Zueblin, of the University of Chicago, was discussing his recent lecture, "The Family," wherein he advocated a compulsory six months' interval between marriage license and marriage.

"Marriage is entered into too hastily," he said. "The six months' interval should be an interval of thought. Thought would cure many of the ills of marriage. Unselfishness would perhaps cure more.

"Selfishness in marriage is on the man's side. Too many men look at every question from one point of view, the selfish one, only.

"It is like Hoskins, of the Lake Shore Drive.

"'You are willing,' said Mrs. Hoskins, 'to lay out $1,000 a month on your wine and cigar bill; but you grumble like a bear when I want a few hundred for a dinner gown.'

"'Well,' snarled Hoskins, 'can I smoke or drink a dinner gown?'"

Our Own Minstrels.

"Mistah Walkah, kin yo' tell me de diff'unce 'tween a teacher tryin' to ketch a train an' a 'toxicated commercial traveler?"

"No, George; that's clear over my head. What is the difference between a teacher trying to catch a train and an intoxicated commercial traveler?"

"De one am a tutor on a run an' de uddah am a runner on a toot."

"Ladies and gentlemen, Prof. Ginseng, the renowned tenor, will now sing a selection of his own composing, entitled 'Little Macarooney Is My Sweet Tart.'"

It is amusing to hear the different opinions expressed by people. This week the reporter was talking with one man and he says, "There's too much rain, everything will be drowned, too much water, nothing going to grow." Along came another fellow and he said, "Pretty nice rain we had, its just the making of our wheat and hay crop and the corn is doing fine too." There you are.

Lagrange Goes Dry

After having been dry by remonstrance for about three years Lagrange county, Tuesday, voting upon the option law, recorded its ballots against saloon licenses by a margin of probably only 250 votes. Indifference of the public is held largely responsible for the small majority, although about 70 per cent of the county's total vote was cast. The "wet" faction had an organization to push their campaign, while very little enthusiasm was aroused by the dry forces. It is believed the temperance contingent felt the county was safly dry without the necessity of their making strennous efffforts.

Strike on at Garrett

The B. & O. shops at Garrett are suffering from the effects of a strike which occurred last Thursday. The machinists at Mt. Clare struck and orders were sent to the Garrett leaders and they obeyed, how many went out is not exactly known. Strike breakers were brought in from Chicago but a majority of them returned the same day. It is also feared that the boiler-makers will go on a sympathy strike and may be carried to the steam fitters. The strike is to be regretted. It is merely a sympathetic strike with the men in the east who went out because the company put them on piece work. The Garrett men had no complaint so far as they themselves were concerned. But the order came from their leaders and the most of them obeyed.

In an effort to "shoo" a fly off his nose and at the same time grease a wagon axle, James Horrall, a well known Knox county farmer, suffered a broken arm. He had axle grease on his hand when a fly settled on his nose. In brushing at the pest with his elbow the farmer accidentally touched the handle of a lifting jack which held up the wagon. The handle released the clutch and the weight of the wogon suddenly freed, caused the handle to fly up against Horrall's right arm, breaking it near the shoulder.—Ex. Moral: Let the flies chew.

Old People's Home Day

The Sundays of June 27 and July 4 will be of special importance to Methodism within the bounds of the North Indiana Conference. In every church the Home for the Aged will be the theme of appropriate sermon and special song; all of which will be significant in behalf of the movement founding the Home. It is expected soon to erect the main building and at an early day the Home will be carrying out its beneficient purposes. It is a matter of gratitude that this worthy institution is so near the realization of its promoters and it will be, in its active operations, a source of genuine pleasure, that this Home expression distinctively, Christian philantrophy; a philanthrophy that makes it appeal to, and has its rightful claim upon, the benevolence of all who sympathize with the worthy dependent aged.

The active work of the Home will redeem the church from the oft repeated charge that her aged are often the subjects of neglect. This general observance in behalf of the Home will be productive of enlarged interest, and will bring it to the positive encouragement of the entire Conference. Indiana Methodism has two great institutions in operation, one each within the bounds of the Northwest and the Indiana Conferences, respectively. The establishment of this Home for the Aged at Warren within the bounds of the North Indiana Conference gives to each of the three Methodist Conferences of the state a representative institution—one for education, one for healing and this for the care of the dependent aged.

The North Indiana Conference will do itself worthy honor in planting this Home on a basis of largest service in this department of Christian activity.

Care for Your Eyes.

Never read facing the light, with the head lowered, on a moving train, while you are rocking, when you are weary and hungry, nor immediately before dusk.

Don't use your eyes when they smart; smarting means that they are calling for rest.

Beware of a dazzling sunshine or a high wind on a very dusty day; even if you boast of strong eyes, under such conditions better protect them with glasses.

Don't squint; it weakens the lids. Neither must you wink; a bad habit is formed and you wink unconsciously.

All these precautions are within your control and it will repay you to heed them.

Explosion Deals Death.

Six men literally burned to a crisp, ten probably fatally injured, and ten more or less seriously injured, are the results of an explosion at the Martins Ferry (Ohio) blast furnace of the Wheeling Steel and Iron Company. Twenty-four others had miraculous escapes from horrible death or injury. At midnight fragments of four blackened bodies had been recovered. The two other victims will probably never be found. The twenty injured men, some with arms and legs burned off and their bodies terribly burned are being attended at a hospital at Martins Ferry. Some of the injured after being showered with the molten iron ran screaming to the Ohio river near by and plunged into the water. They were quickly rescued and sent to a hospital.

First Class for the Mizpah Temple.

The recently installed Mizpah Temple of the Mystic Shrine will on June 26th admit its first class of candidates, the work being conferred by the patrol of the Murat Temple of Indianapolis. The Fort Wayne lodge charter members were formerly affiliated with the Murat Temple until the recent founding of the Mizpah Temple at Ft. Wayne, Ind. It is expected that over 100 new Shriners will be made on that day, and with the 150 charter members of the Mizpah Temple the Fort Wayne organization will compare very favorably with the largest in the Middle West. On the afternoon of June 26 the members of the Mizpah Temple and all visiting Shriners in full regalia will parade the main thoroughfares.

Was Held Up By Gypsies.

Mr. Henry Meyer, of Fort Wayne, Ind., reported to Deputy Sheriff Ed Courdevay that he had been held up and robbed while driving with his wife south of the city. He claimed that the robbery occurred in a particularly dark spot, and he would not be able to identify the members of the gypsy band camped near the spot he described. Mr. Meyer stated that his buggy was surrounded by the band, a number of whom had revolvers. The gypsies moved into Adams County.

Farmer Trampled By Horse.

George Essener, of near Tocsin, Ind., met with a serious accident while unhitching his horse from a wagon at the home. One of the animals frightened and knocked Essener to the ground. The wagon was also dragged over his body. The family hurried to his assistance and found several wounds about his head and body. He will be under the care of a physician for several weeks.

The youth and the girl were making their home with their mother, who lives in Warsaw. The boy says he is not guilty of the charge. The arrest was made by Chas. Moon, city marshal, who also made the affidavit.

WANTS A NEW TREATY WITH UNITED STATES

President Taft May Hasten Action Desired by Japan on Friendly Compact.

EXCLUSION IS TO PLAY A PART.

Mikado's Empire Now a World Power and Demands More Favorable Treatment as Such.

The first step in what will become the most important negotiations that have occurred in the relations of the United States and Japan have been taken in Washington by Ambassador Takhira, the representative of the Emperor of the far Eastern people. He has notified the Secretary of State of the purpose of his government to terminate the treaty of friendship, navigation, and commerce, which was signed in 1894 and entered into effect in 1899, and has evidenced its desire to formulate a new treaty which shall apply to the existing conditions.

The treaty which it will be the intention of Japan to bring to an end is similar to those in force with the other powers, including Great Britain. It was negotiated while the Japanese were invading China fifteen years ago, and their victory not only demonstrated the weakness of the Celestial empire, but caused the West to realize that a new military force had appeared in the world. It went into effect in the year before the Boxer revolt in China, during which the Japanese expedition conducted itself in a manner that compared most favorably with the behavior of the troops of the other nations.

Japan Now World Power.

The humiliation of Russia added to the prestige of Japan, and the latter now appears in the council of the powers, their equal in standing, and seeks to have the treaties between them and her modified in accordance with her international position. These treaties expire by their terms in 1911, and Japan, desirous to maintain contractural relations with the other powers, has proposed that the negotiations shall begin next year of conventions to take their place. Some embarrassment has arisen in connection with the treaty with the United States because of an amendment made by the Senate when ratifying the instrument, under which the expiration would not occur until 1912.

There is a tactical advantage in this situation for the United States, since the first difficulties connected with the negotiations will be thrown upon Great Britain, which must arrange a new treaty to become effective in 1911. But, on the other hand, if Great Britain accords certain concessions to her ally Japan naturally would seek their incorporation in the new treaty with this country.

Consequently it may be decided by President Taft as a mark of friendship for Japan to agree to the termination of the present treaty in in 1911 and to enter upon new negotiations next year. The importance of these negotiations will at once be appreciated when it is known that the Tokio government proposes to insist upon the elimination of that provision of the treaty granting to the United States the right to regulate the admission of Japanese laborers.

WELL; SENT TO LEPER COLONY.

Ten Supposed Victims Found, After Years, Not to Have Disease.

After some of them had spent twenty years of their life in the leper settlement on the Island of Molokai, ten of eleven supposed lepers who were returned to Honolulu at the instance of the territorial legislative committee for re-examination, have been found free of the disease. Of these two are boys of 6 and 7 years, but the others vary in age from 27 to 79. A pathetic feature of the re-examination is the probability that some of the older patients will petition to be returned to the island, as they have been shut off from the world and their friends so long that they have no place to go. A few of the patients were sent to the settlement before the bacteriological test for leprosy was discovered, and it is believed that in some cases a natural cure has been effected.

DAYS OF JOY AND NIGHTS OF PAIN.

SLAYS FIVE AND HURTS THREE.

Slaughterer at Massachusetts Packing Plant Crazed by Blood.

Crazed by lust of killing, Thomas Murphy, a pig slaughterer at the North Packing plant at Somerville, Mass., weighing 200 pounds, ran amuck the other afternoon. Before he was subdued five men had been killed and four others injured. Two of the wounded were reported later as dying. Armed with the huge knife that he used in his work, Murphy ran about the plant, squealing like a pig, cutting and slashing at all within reach. Those he killed were dispatched instantly. Slashing one's throat with the same darting movement he used when killing a pig, he gave none a chance for life. The weapon he used was sixteen inches long and sharp as a razor. Those who were injured escaped death by flight. Murphy, who is 50 years old, has been employed in the plant for many years. He was known as a good workman in his department, but was always sullen and morose. Of late he has complained of having headaches and said that the smell of the fresh blood from the slaughtered animals made him "see red."

FLOOD LOSS IN COLORADO.

Four Lives Have Been Destroyed and Train Service Is Interrupted.

Floods due to heavy rains, in some instances approaching cloudbursts, and melting snow is causing damage in many sections of Colorado. Four lives have been lost in swollen streams, and much destruction of property caused. Train service in all directions has been interrupted. The Grand Junction water system is threatened by a flood in the Grand and Gunnison rivers, and other enterprises there face heavy damage. Around Greely the lowlands are being flooded by a sudden rise in the Cache la Poudre River. A dam southeast of Denver burst, and the water swept through the lower parts of the suburban town of Englewood, causing considerable damage. In the neighborhood of Limon the junction point of the Rock Island and the Union Pacific Railroads, a cloudburst changed the Big Sandy from a dry bed to a roaring river, flooding many farms in the low sections.

ODDS & ENDS OF SPORT

Walter Miller, the jockey, who had more winning mounts on the American turf during the racing seasons of 1905-6-7 than any other rider, will ride on the English turf as a free lance.

Before a tremendous crowd in Philadelphia Jack O'Brien stayed six rounds with Jack Johnson without suffering any damage, and would have secured a draw out of it had there been a decision rendered.

Edward Payson Weston, in his walk from New York to the Pacific coast has been covering sixty-three miles a day across Western Kansas and Eastern Colorado, about a mile for each year of his age.

One of the most exciting finishes ever witnessed in a sprint race occurred at Louisville when Gypsy King and Hyperion II. swept across the line in the third race event so close together than even the judges could not separate them.

FIND SUNKEN TREASURE SHIP?

Dredgers Near Fort Mifflin Discover Traces of Wealth.

Government officials are agitated over the discovery of an obstruction in the Delaware River, in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, which, they think, may prove to be a treasure ship which went down in 1812. It is known that there is a boat at the bottom of the river at that point and war equipment of value, as well as gold and silver, are supposed to lie within the hold of the ship. While the government boat Cataract was working in the vicinity the other day the suction pump became clogged, and when it was brought to the surface it was found to contain several fancy and costly helmets, such as were worn by the English soldiers, and equipments of other descriptions. This discovery has led to the belief that it is one of the boats of the English government which brought gold to this country to pay its soldiers during the war of 1812, and which was sunk at this point.

ASK ACREAGE IN DESERT LAND.

Big Rush at Phoenix—Railroad Representative Jarred by Ruling.

The rush at the Phoenix, Ariz., land office Thursday resulted in the filing of seventy-three applications on a total of over 20,000 acres of desert land at different points adjacent to Agua Fria River, twenty-five miles west of Phoenix. The line had been formed for twenty-four hours preceding the opening at 9 o'clock. Well toward the head of the line was a representative of the land department for the Santa Fe Railroad with a large quantity of railroad land scrip. The registrar and receiver promulgated a ruling that no one applicant could make more than two filings, or 320 acres, at one time. The railroad representative retired without filing. Later in the day, after the line cleared, the railroad representative made a filing on 2,700 acres with forest scrip.

LIFE OF MURDERER SPARED.

Actuated by Wife's Petition, President Commutes Sentence.

Through the intervention of Mrs. Taft a Russian named Perovich, who was convicted of murder at Fairbanks, Alaska, and sentenced to die, has been saved from the gallows. Actuated by his wife's pleas that mercy be shown the condemned man, the President has commuted the sentence to life imprisonment. Perovich was tried and convicted before Judge Wickersham, then federal judge in Alaska, and now a congressional delegate from the territory. Although compelled by the verdict to pronounce a death sentence, Judge Wickersham recommended mercy, as did Attorney General Wickersham. The incident has served to illustrate the part Mrs. Taft plays in at least one phase of the work of the nation's executive.

MAN HERO; WIFE SUICIDE.

Husband Leaps Into Niagara River, but Fails to Save Her.

A thrilling tragedy and rescue took place in Niagara River between the First and Sister Islands Sunday afternoon when Mrs. Sarah Cohen, wife of Louis Cohen of Buffalo, jumped into the river as her children and husband looked on. Mr. Cohen jumped to her rescue and husband and wife were swept down under the bridge between the two islands. Here Cohen seized the woman, but her body was jammed between a rock and a log and he could not lift her to the surface. Cohen was rescued by men on shore. His wife was drowned.

U. S. GAINS IN CANADA TRADE.

Reports Show That British Are Losing Dominion Business.

Merchandise from the United States forms a steadily increasing share of the imports of Canada, as shown by figures from Canadian official publications just received by the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor in Washington. Furthermore, Canada's imports from Great Britain have declined during their period of increase from this country. Whereas imports from the United States to Canada increased from 34.03 per cent of the total importations of Canada in 1869 to 60.4 per cent of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1909, the imports from Great Britain have decreased during the same period from 56.2 per cent to 23.69 per cent. Two-thirds of Canada's imports are manufactured, amounting in 1907, the last year for which statistics are available, to $166,000,000. Of this amount $89,000,000 worth, 53 per cent of the total, were from the United States, and only $54,000,000, or 33 per cent, from Great Britain. Merchandise entering Canada from the United Kingdom and most of the British colonies is admitted at rates materially below those of the general tariff paid by merchandise from the United States.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Walter E. Clark, a Washington newspaper man, has been appointed governor of Alaska, and William S. Washburn, of New York, has been appointed civil service commissioner to succeed James T. Williams, resigned.

Because they consider it an affront to the dignity of the lower house, the seven Wisconsin assemblymen subpoenaed by the Senate committee investigating the re-election of Senator Stephenson ignored the command of the upper house and their action was approved by the assembly. The committee wish to continue it until the extra session next January, when it will be able to bring before it the assemblymen who have taken advantage of their constitutional privilege as legislators.

Nelson S. Pratt, who has just been inaugurated as mayor of Spokane, Wash., and the council of that city are to work under the amended charter providing that unsatisfactory officials may be recalled upon a petition of 25 per cent of the voters. The same charter also provides for an initiative and referendum on the appeal of 10 per cent of the voters who voted on May 4. Mayor Pratt, a Democrat, was elected on a nonpartisan platform, the Democratic machine having supported J. T. Omo.

Governor Stubbs of Kansas has received a letter from President Taft expressing strong resentment over the effort made by the governor to make political capital out of the appointment of his personal friend, Robert Stone of Topeka, to be an assistant to the attorney general and at the same time revoked the appointment of Stone. The President said he would not permit himself to be drawn into any factional fight. He had supposed that Stone had the backing of the congressional delegation, but found later that the first known of the appointment by Senator Curtis and his friends was the boastful announcement made in the Stubbs-Bristow papers.

Work of Congress

Through forenoon, afternoon and evening sessions the Senate Friday labored on the cotton schedule. Mr. La Follette completed his long speech attacking the changes in the Dingley rates which were recommended by the Senate Finance Committee and replied to Senator Penrose's charge that he was shamming sickness as an excuse for his absence from the night session. He said he was not sick, but was very tired and was resting in order to be in shape to continue his speech in the Senate. At the night session Chairman Aldrich replied to Mr. La Follette's assault upon the work of the Finance Committee and made a general defense of amendments, which he asserted were necessary to carry out the intent of the framers of the Dingley law. The House was not in session.

After devoting the larger portion of Saturday to listening to a discussion of the cotton cloth schedule, the Senate entered upon a period of voting late in the afternoon and rapidly disposed of the entire subject of changing from ad valorem to specific duties for the purpose of preventing under-valuations. On all the votes taken the finance committee was sustained by a majority of ten or eleven. Three votes were necessary to accomplish this result, and others would have been necessary but for Senator Bacon, who, seeing the futility of opposing the committee, suggested the grouping of the votes after the first two ballots had been taken. This suggestion was unanimously agreed to, with the result that so much was accomplished that a night session was not held. Senator Dolliver occupied much of the time of the session with a speech in which he indulged in much caustic criticism of the methods of the finance committee. The House was not in session.

The Senate chamber Monday was the scene of a sharp conflict between Senator Aldrich and Senator Beveridge over the tariff bill. Both Senators were frequently on their feet and were the chief speakers of the day. The first subject of dispute was Aldrich's amendment for a duty of 3 cents a square yard and 20 per cent ad valorem on window hollands. This amendment was finally adopted by the usual majority, as were all the other committee amendments to the cotton schedule. A motion to remove rubber goods from the cotton schedule prevailed and overshoes and other rubber articles in which cotton is a factor will get a lower rate of duty. The Senate hosiery rates, which are a re-enactment of the Dingley rates, were adopted. The House of Representatives passed the Porto Rican bill without amendment. The bill provides that whenever the Legislature shall fail to make the necessary appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year, those for the current year shall be considered as in force and effect. It also provides that hereafter all reports of an official character shall be made direct to an executive of the government of the United States to be designated by the President, and such department is authorized to take jurisdiction of all matters pertaining to the island possession. At 3:05 p. m. the House adjourned until Thursday.

The woolen schedule of the tariff bill was taken up in the Senate Tuesday. Mr. Dolliver offered several amendments and announced his intention of presenting a number of others, appealing to the Republican members to vote with him because, he said, these amendments would justify the attitude of the Republican party in advocating a protective tariff. Mr. Smoot, assisted to a large extent by Mr. Warren, defended the finance committee's recommendations with regard to that schedule. The various amendments proposed to the House bill by the finance committee of the Senate are intended to restore the Dingley provisions, which in some instances provide higher duties than the Payne bill. Mr. Dolliver proposed an amendment which would assess the duties on woolens on an ad valorem basis according to the shrinkage of the wool. Mr. Warren, in order to illustrate the small proportion of the entire cost of a woolen garment which is dutiable, asked Mr. Dolliver to examine the suit which he was wearing. Mr. Dolliver said it appeared to him to be a very good suit, whereupon Mr. Warren explained that the cloth in the suit cost only $4, while the making and the trimming cost $42, showing that the duty on the $4 worth of cloth was trifling compared with the entire cost of the suit. The usual night session was omitted. The House was not in session.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

St. Mary's Cathedral, Covington, Ky., is to have the largest cathedral window in the United States, and the second largest in the world. It will contain 1,500 square feet of glass.

Diplomatic relations between the United States and Venezuela, broken off nearly a year ago, were formally resumed the other day when Pedro Rojas, the new minister from that country, was formally presented to President Taft.

M. H. De Young, owner of the San Francisco Chronicle, has purchased the eleven-story loft and office building at 236 and 238 Fifth avenue, New York. The property was valued at considerably more than $1,000,000.

"Well, Jim," he said, putting out his hand. "I hope you're feelin' out of sight." Wheaton took his hand and said good evening. He threw open his coat and put down his hat.

"A little fresh air wouldn't hurt you any," he said, tipping himself back in his chair.

"Well, I guess your own freshness will make up for it," said Snyder.

Wheaton did not smile; he was very cool and master of the situation.

"I came to see what you want, and it had better not be much."

"Oh, you cheer up, Jim," said Snyder, with his ugly grin. "I don't know that you've ever done so much for me. I don't want you to forget that I did time for you once."

"You'd better not rely on that too much. I was a poor little kid and all the mischief I ever knew I learned from you. What is it you want now?"

"Well, Jim, you've seen fit to get me fired from that nice lonesome job you got me, back in the country."

"I had nothing to do with it. The ranch owners sent a man here to represent them and I had nothing more to do with it. The fact is I stretched a point to put you in there. Mr. Saxton has taken the whole matter of the ranch out of my hands."

"Well, I don't know anything about that," said Snyder, contemptuously. "But that don't many any difference. I'm out, and I don't know but I'm glad to be out. That was a fool job; about the lonesomest thing I ever struck. Your friend Saxton didn't seem to take a shine to me; wanted me to go chasing cattle all over the Northwest——"

"He flattered you," said Wheaton, a faint smile drawing at the corners of his mouth.

"None of that kind of talk," returned Snyder, sharply. "Now what you got to say for yourself?"

"It isn't necessary for me to say anything about myself,' said Wheaton, coolly. "What I'm going to say is that you've got to get out of here in a hurry and stay out."

"Don't get funny, Jim. Large bodies move slowly. It took me a long time to find you and I don't intend to let you go in a hurry."

"I have no more jobs for you; if you stay about here you'll get into trouble. I was a fool to send you to that ranch. I heard about your little round with the sheriff, and the gambling you carried on in the ranch house."

"Well, when you admit you're a fool you're getting on," said Snyder, with a chuckle.

"Now I'm going to make you a fair offer: I'll give you one hundred dollars to clear out—go to Mexico or Canada ——"

"Raise your price, Jim," said Snyder. "A hundred wouldn't take me very far."

"Oh yes, it will. What I'll do," Wheaton went on undisturbed, "is to buy you a ticket to Spokane to-morrow. I'll meet you here and give you your transportation and a hundred dollars in cash. Now that's all I'll do for you, and it's a lot more than you deserve."

"Oh, no, it ain't," said Snyder.

"And it's the last I'll ever do."

"Don't be too sure of that. I want five hundred and a regular allowance, say twenty-five dollars a month."

"I don't intend to fool with you," said Wheaton, sharply. He rose and picked up his hat. "What I offer you is opt of pure kindness; we may as well understand each other. You and I are walking along different lines. I'd be glad, to see you succeed in some honorable business; you're not too old to begin. I can't have you around here. It's out of the question—my giving you a pension. I can't do anything or the kind."

His tone gradually softened; he took on an air of patient magnanimity. Snyder broke in with a sneer.

"Look here, Jim, don't try the goody-goody business on me. You think you're mighty smooth and you're mighty good and you're gettin' on pretty fast. Your picture in the papers is mighty handsome, and you looked real swell in them fine clothes up at the banker's talkin' to that girl."

"That's another thing,' said Wheaton, still standing. "I ought to refuse to do anything for you after that. Getting drunk and attacking me couldn't possibly do you or me any good. It was sheer luck that you weren't turned over to the police."

"That old preacher gave me a pretty hard jar."

"You ought to be jarred. You're no good. You haven't even been successful in your own particular line of business.'

"There ain't nothing against me anywhere," said Snyder, doggedly.

"I have different information," said Wheaton, blandly. "There was the matter of that postoffice robbery in Michigan; attempted bank robbery in Wisconsin, and a few little things of that sort scattered through the country, that make a pretty ugly list. But they say you're not very strong in the profession." He smiled an unpleasant smile.

Snyder drew his feet from the table and jumped up with an oath.

"Look here, Jim, if you ain't playin' square with me——"

"I intend playing more than square with you, but I want you to know that I'm not afraid of you; I've taken the trouble to look you up. The Pinkertons have long memories,' he said, significantly.

Snyder was visibly impressed, and Wheaton made haste to follow up his advantage.

"You've got to get away from here Billy, and be in a hurry about it. At 8 to-morrow night."

"Make it two hundred, Jim," whined Snyder.

Wheaton paused in the door; Snyder had followed him. They were the same height as they stood up together.

"That's too much money to trust you with."

"The more money the farther I can get," pleaded Snyder.

"I'll be here at 8 to-morrow night,' said Wheaton, "and you stay here until I come."

Two or three men who were sitting in the office below eyed Wheaton curiously as he went out. The thought that they might recognize him from his portraits in the papers pleased him.

He retraced his steps from the hotel and boarded a car filled with people of the laboring class who were returning from an outing in the suburbs. They were making merry in a strange tongue and their boisterous mirth was an offense to him. He was a gentleman of position returning from an errand of philanthropy, and he remained on the platform, where the atmosphere was purer than that within, which was contaminated by the rough young Swedes and their yellow-haired sweethearts. When he reached The Bachelors' the dozing Chinaman told him that all the others were out. He went to his room and spent the rest of the evening reading a novel which he had heard Evelyn Porter mention the night that he had dined at her house.

The next day he bought a ticket to Spokane, and drew one hundred dollars from his account in the bank. He went at 8 o'clock to the Occidental to keep his appointment, and found Snyder patiently waiting for him in the hotel office, holding a shabby valise between his knees.

At the railway station Wheaton stepped inside the door and pulled two sealed envelopes from his pocket. "Here's your ticket, and here's your money. The ticket's good through to Spokane; and that's your train, the first one in the shed. Now I want you to understand that this is the last time, Billy; you've got to work and make your own living. I can't do anything more for you; and what's more, I won't."

"All right, Jim," said Snyder. "You won't ever lose anything by helping me along. You're in big luck and it ain't going to hurt you to give me a little boost now and then."

"This is the last time," said Wheaton, firmly, angry at Snyder's hint for further assistance.

Wheaton stood inside the station and watched the man cross the electric-lighted platform, show his ticket at the gate, and walk to the train. He still waited, watching the car which the man boarded, until the train rolled out into the night.

AND LET HER DRIVE ME ALL OVER TOWN.

CHAPTER VIII.

Saxton dined alone at the Clarkson Club, as he usually did, and went afterward to his office, which he still maintained in the Clarkson National Building. He had been studying the report of an engineering expert on a Colorado irrigation scheme and he was trying to master and correct its weaknesses. As he hung over the blue-prints and the pages of figures that lay before him, the flashing red wheels of Mabel Margrave's trap kept interfering. He thought he understood why his friend Warry had been so occupied in his office of late; but whether Warry and Evelyn Porter were engaged or not, Warry ought to find better use for his talents than in amusing Mabel Margrave. The elevator outside discharged a passenger; he heard the click of the wire door as the cage receded, followed by Raridan's quick step in the hall, and Warry broke in on him.

"Well, you're the limit! I'd like to know what you mean by roosting up here and not staying in your room where a white man can find you." He stood with his hands thrust into the pockets of his top-coat, and glared at Saxton, who lay back in his chair. "I wish I could rattle you once and shake you out of your Harvard aplomb!"

"That's a very pretty coat you have on, Mr. Raridan. It must be nice to be a plutocrat and wear clothes like that."

"The beastly thing doesn't fit," growled Raridan, throwing himself into a chair. "I don't fit, and my clothes don't fit, and ——"

"And you're having a fit. You'd better see a nerve specialist."

"I say, Saxton," he said, calmly.

"Well! Has Vesuvius subsided?" Saxton sat up in his chair.

"What a merry-go-round of a fool I make of myself! As I'm a living man, I had no more intention of driving with that girl than I had of going up in a balloon, and walking back. You know I never knew her well; I don't want to know her, for that matter; not on your life!"

"Is this a guessing contest? I suppose I'm the goat. Well, you didn't care for Miss Margrave's society; is that what you're driving at? She shan't hear this from me; I'm as safe as a tomb. Moreover, I don't enjoy her acquaintance. Go ahead now, full speed."

"And it was just my luck that I got caught this afternoon," continued Warry, ignoring him. "Sometimes it seems to me that I'm predestined and foreordained to do fool things. I've been working on a washerwoman's suit against the Transcontinental—running their switch through her back yard—and I had put away all kinds of temptation and was feeling particularly virtuous; but here came the Margrave nigger with that girl's note, and I went up the street in long jumps to meet her, and let her drive me all over town and all over the country. I wish you'd do something to me; hit me with a club, or throw me down the elevator, or do something equally brutal and coarse that would jar a little of the folly of me. Why," he continued, with utter self-contempt, through which his humor glimmered, "I ought to have turned down Mabel's invitation as soon as I saw the monogram on her note paper. Three colors, and letters as big as your hand! My instinctive good taste falters, old man; it needs restoring and chastening."

"I quite agree with you, sir. But it's more gallant to abuse yourself than Miss Margrave's stationery—that is, if I am correctly gathering up the crumbs of your thought."

"See here, John, she means a whole lot to me. You know whom I mean." Saxton knew he did not mean Mabel Margrave. "You know," Raridan went on, "we were kids together up there on those hills. We both had our dancing lessons at her house, and did such stunts as that together."

"Yes," said Saxton.

"I want to work and show that I'm some good. I want to make myself worthy of her." He got up and walked the floor, while Saxton sat and watched him. "I can't talk about it; you understand what I want to do. It has seemed to me lately that I have more to overcome than I can ever manage." He stood at the window playing with the cord of the shade and looking out over the town. Saxton walked to the window and stood by him, saying nothing; and after a moment he put his hand on Raridan's shoulder and turned him round and grasped Warry's slender fingers in his broad, strong hand.

"I understand how it is, old man. It isn't so bad as you think it is, I'm sure. It will all come out right."

(To be continued.)

Spring in the Park.

They strolled through the park. Every few seconds he would blissfully squeeze her hand. And all the loungers and nurse maids on the benches grinned their broadest.

"Clarence," she whispered, red with blushes, "stop this instant."

"Oh, don't worry, darling," he laughed. "I am only showing my sentiment."

"Yes, but I don't like that kind of sentiment."

"Why not, dear?"

"Because it is 'public sentiment.'"

Quite Safe.

She—Have you any strawberries?

Dealer—Yes'm. Here they are—$1.50 per box.

She—Goodness! They're miserable-looking, and so green.

Dealer—I know, ma'am; but there ain't enough in a box to do you any harm.

He Had the Easy Part.

Wifey—It certainly does one good to have Dr. Jolly when one is sick.

Hubby—Oh! I don't think he is any better than the other doctors.

"But he is so pleasant."

"Well, how can he be otherwise when he is getting $3 for a ten-minute call?"

New Complexities.

"What do the letters R. S. V. P. at the bottom of this invitation mean?" asked Mr. Cumrox.

"Why, everybody knows that they signify 'Please answer.'"

"Great Scott! This spelling reform is playing smash, isn't it?"—Washington Star.

FIND BLACK HAND LAIR; GANG IS RUN TO EARTH

Postoffice Inspectors Discover Band Whose Operations Extend Over State of Ohio.

BOMB HAD NOTE PINNED TO IT

Arrests Made of Men Said to Be Chiefs of Italian Blackmailing Organization.

In several arrests made in Columbus, Marion and Dennison, Ohio, Tuesday federal inspectors and detectives who worked in conjunction with them in the case believe that as a result of months of effort they have unearthed the biggest and best organized branch of the Black Hand in this country, Marion, Ohio, being probably the head of the organization. Chief Postoffice Inspector Charles Holmes of Cincinnati is authority for the statement that evidence has been secured showing that the gang operating from Marion and with lines reaching into a number of big cities of the country, has fleeced different persons in that and other States out of thousands of dollars in the last few months by the application of Black Hand methods.

The men arrested were Sam Lima and Joe Rizzo, at Marion; Antonio Vicario, at Columbus, and A. Marfis, at Dennison. Lima is said to be the chief of the band. Inspector Holmes said he was expecting word from Bellfontaine, Ohio, of two more arrests, and these, he said, would be of vital importance in connection with those already made.

Divide Big Booty.

Inspector Holmes says that the gang which conducted its operations from Marion was composed of Italians and worked exclusively upon their countrymen. He has obtained evidence that as late as two weeks ago they sent from the Marion postoffice money orders aggregating $1,900 to confederates in Italy, this being the division of blackmail funds in one case. Many such bits of evidence, it is claimed, are in possession of the inspectors.

Among those who refused demands for money were John and Charles Amicou, Columbus commission merchants. The sum of $10,000 was sought from each. In January Mrs. John Amicon found, in the rear of the house, a dynamite bomb and fuse, wrapped with one of the letters demanding payment from her husband. Several Columbus Italians are believed to have paid $1,000 each. Two Italian murders in Marion are generally charged to the gang, but there has been no proof. The gang also is charged with assassinations in Bellefontaine and Dennison.

Followed to Italy.

After demands for money had been ignored an attempt was made in April, 1908, to blow up the home of Agostino Gennarino, Columbus. Gennarino fled to Italy and did not return until a month ago. While in Italy he received a letter, mailed in Italy, renewing the demand, with a threat that there was no escape in returning to his old home.

Black Hand letters in the hands of the officials, written to Italians in Columbus, Cincinnati and other cities, are all said to be written by the same person, in Italian, with the same ink and on the same kind of paper. In the raid at Marion, ink and paper were captured which is identical with that used in making the demands.

Most of the letters received in Columbus and other Ohio cities were mailed in Pittsburg, where the money was to be paid. It is believed that they were written in Marion and passed through the hands of several messengers in different cities before being mailed.

BALLOON INDIANA LAST TO LAND

Fisher and Bambaugh Descend Six Miles North of Dickson, Tenn.

Carl Fisher and G. L. Bumbaugh of Indianapolis, who started from there Saturday afternoon in the national balloon race, landed with their balloon, Indiana, six miles north of Dickson, Tenn., at 6 p. m., Monday, according to advices received. It was the last balloon to land. The aeronauts had landed previously at Ashland City, Tenn., to take on water. According to a dispatch from that town they landed on a pile of ties. They reascended and started northwest. They maintained, according to the dispatch, that the fact that they did not touch ground would prevent their being disqualified. Dr. Goethe Link and J. R. Irvin of the balloon Indianapolis did not know they had won the first prize in the handicap balloon race until they reached Louisville.

FIRE IN APARTMENT HOUSE.

Boy Is Burned to Death and Several Seriously Injured.

In a fire which started in the kitchen of the Knight apartment house in Dallas, Tex., Hershel Dannelly, 8 years old, was burned to a crisp, two others were fatally injured and several seriously hurt. Sixty-two people were asleep in the building when the fire started. A number were forced to jump.

COL. A. K. M'CLURE DIES.

Famous Civil War Figure Founded and Edited Philadelphia Times.

Colonel Alexander K. McClure, friend and biographer of Abraham Lincoln, prothonotary of the Supreme and Superior courts of Pennsylvania and for many years a prominent figure in politics and journalism, died Sunday at his home in Wallingford, Delaware County, Pa., aged 81 years.

Mr. McClure was born in Sherman's Valley, Perry County, Pa., June 9, 1828. The early years of his life were spent on his father's farm. At the age of 14 years, after being fairly well grounded in the rudiments of a common school education, his school days ended, and he was apprenticed to James Marshall, a tanner.

Before he was 19 years of age Mr. McClure had quit the tannery business, acquired a smattering of the art of printing and started a newspaper of his own at Mifflin, Pa. Here he let his taste for politics, which had been well fostered in the tanyard discussions, have full play. The result was that before he attained his majority he was called into conference over the congressional situation as the friend of Andrew G. Curtin. Later Curtin was defeated. His young champion always attributed this defeat to General Cameron, a Democratic state leader, and hated him accordingly. Both the friendship and the hatred Mr. McClure formed at this early period lasted many years.

It was in 1850 that McClure first entered the "big editorial field," as it was then considered, and became a power in State politics. Through the interest of Curtin he was given charge of the Chambersburg Repository. He was first elected to the legislature in 1857. He was re-elected the following year, which brought out the true brilliancy of his political acumen. As chairman of the Republican State committee he engineered the campaign through the bitter fight of civil strife, reached the State Senate himself, elected Curtin to the governorship and delivered the State to Lincoln.

During the Civil War he was one of the sturdy, picturesque figures of Pennsylvania politics and did much to guard the interests of the Union. In 1873 Mr. McClure sought to become mayor of Philadelphia, making a brave fight against the machine. He was defeated by a small majority. It was then that he determined to reenter the field of journalism. After an attempt to secure the Press at Philadelphia from Colonel Forney, who had been his partisan in politics for years, Mr. McClure started the Times. This paper, although new and fighting against well-established and wealthy rivals, made excellent progress because of the originality instilled into its columns by Mr. McClure's efforts. He not only raised the tone of the newspapers from the dull routine that had characterized the press of Philadelphia, but also set a new standard for salaries for the newspaper workers of the city.

$650.000 FIRE; MAN KILLED.

Big Mill and Elevator of Cereal Company at Decatur, Ill., Destroyed.

In a fire which started shortly after 1 a. m. Tuesday from electric wiring on the sixth floor of the mill of the Decatur Cereal Company, the entire plant was destroyed, with a loss of $650,000. The insurance is $165,000. In addition to 80,000 bushels of corn in an adjacent elevator, also owned by the Decatur Cereal Company, were destroyed. In an effort to rescue some of the office effects of the firm, John Sheehy, a fireman, was struck on the head by a falling timber and was instantly killed. The buildings were situated at Eldorado and Vandyke streets, with a frontage of two blocks on the Wabash railroad. The elevator had a capacity of 100,000 bushels of corn. The entire local fire department responded to the general alarm, but from a lack of water pressure they could do nothing to check the progress of the blaze. The company manufactured starch, but one of its main products was corn grits, used largely by brewers. It employed a large number of men and was one of the biggest manufactories of Decatur.

HUNDREDS IN FLOOD PERIL.

Life Lost in the Rise of North Platte River.

One life has been lost and heavy property damage has been caused by floods in the North Platte River and its tributaries. The North Platte is at record flood stage, and continues to rise at the rate of half an inch an hour. Bridges have been carried away and roads in many plaes are impassable. While attempting to cross a bridge spanning a gulley near the Esmay ranch on La Fonte creek, near Douglas, Wyo., Ben Wiederander, his sister and her 4-year-old child, who were driving in a wagon, were precipitated into the water by the breaking of the bridge. The child was drowned. The horses and wagon were swept away by the torrent and the animals drowned. Ordinarily the gulch over which the bridge runs is a dry bed. A heavy rain fell again at Fernie, B. C., and Elk river rose rapidly, flooding houses, lumber mills and schools and carrying away an immense amount of cut lumber. Many booms went out last night, carrying logs down the river by thousands. All streams in Kootenay are in flood, breaking all records. The Canadian Pacific Railroad track was washed away in many places.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Trade maintains sustained progress and seasonable activity marks the leading industries, although capacity is not yet entirely engaged. Crop reports impart much strength to the outlook. Wheat cutting has started and nature is busy raising what promise to be the most valuable grains ever grown.

Heavy June settlements at the banks were attended without any important trading defaults. The demand for money is wider, and this gives the discount rate a firmer tone, but choice commercial paper is readily negotiated without increased cost. An encouraging feature of current operations is the enlarging use of funds for manufacturing and investment purposes.

Warmer weather brings better demand in the leading retail lines, and stocks of lightweight apparel and footwear now move out satisfactorily. Reorders are noted in wholesale dry goods and other staples, while a fair aggregate is booked for the interior for fall and winter goods. Mail orders from local territory and more distant points compare favorably in the aggregate with this time last year.

Less difficulty is met with as to datings and credits, more buyers arranging for the best discount terms. The recent improved demands for furniture, woolens, jewelry and food products gather more force.

Manufacturing now shows more distinctly the recovery in production, and there are increasing movements of finished products from the mills and factories. The markets for raw materials reflect wider absorption and firm prices. Railroad contracts come forward freely for rails, cars and other equipment.

Bank clearings for five days, $252,296,999, exceed those of the corresponding period in 1908 by 19.9 per cent, and compare with $264,869,797 for six days in 1907.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 25, against 26 last week, 22 in 1908 and 29 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 6, against 8 last week, 5 in 1908 and 6 in 1907.—Dun's Weekly Review.

NEW YORK.

All in all the business situation presents many favorable features, but there is still an underlying feeling of conservatism, and while less is heard of the influence of tariff changes on future trade, there is still apparent a disposition to await the outcome of present legislative action and a clearer view as to possible crop yields. Among the leading industries the activity in iron and steel is still a subject of interest and May business in finished lines is claimed to have surpassed the like month of any previous year and to have been superior in tonnage placed to any month for two years past. Wool is quieter, but no less strong. Leather prices are very strong, reflecting the strength of hides and reports of closely held stocks, but shoes, while being ordered more freely, are not selling as heavily for fall as expected.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending with June 3 were 191, against 205 last week, 225 in the like week of 1908, 155 in 1907, 162 in 1906 and 194 in 1905. Business failures for the week in Canada number 26, which compares with 22 last week and 32 last year.—Bradstreet's.

However, Mr. Taft will find it hard work to make hard work popular with the negro.

There are certain United States Senators who, though they might not be aware of it, are heading straight for private life.

Really all this bother about Roosevelt's being in danger from the Mad Mullah is nonsense. Whatever alarms exists ought to be for the Mad Mullah.

It may be true, as an army engineer exclaims, that "Congress can go to h---." But the question of present moment is, Can Congress revise the tariff?

A Mr. and Mrs. Bean in Iowa have named their recently arrived daughter "Lima." The sense of humor possessed by some people is fearfully and wonderfully evidenced.

President Taft was so pleased with a Pittsburg newspaper picture of himself that he invited the photographer to lunch. This may prove a dangerous encouragement of the snapshotters.

Senator Penrose raised an umbrella to illustrate a point in the Senate the other day. Incidentially, also, we presume it was intended as a hint to some of his colleagues to come in out of the rain.

Oh, Mr. Weather Man, we want some hot weather from the tape marked so in the shade; we want it for the crops, we want it for our summer resort business, we want it for the sake of the baseball games; but, most of all, we want it for the effect we believe it would have on the lawmakers at Washington.

The thoughtful observer of affairs in the national capital finds no more interesting theme for speculation and observation than the relations of President Taft to Congress. Before his election to the highest office in the gift of the nation, Mr. Taft's friends widely and enthusiastically proclaimed his diplomacy, citing his conduct of affairs in the Philippines and his general visits to Japan, his mission to Cuba and Rome, as instances of his peculiar abilities in this direction, but it is doubtful if he ever occupied an office which made greater demands on his diplomacy than does that of Chief Executive. Judge Taft is a man of the highest ideals. For four years he sat at the cabinet table of Theodore Roosevelt and although it would be difficult to find two men of more divergent temperaments, Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary of War became thoroughly imbued with the Wisdom of his policies and though methods are radically different his aims are the same. The leaders of the Republican party in the national legislature are of a wholly different stamp. While it is only fair to assume that they, too, cherish as their ultimate ideal the welfare of the nation, they are imbued with the idea that such welfare depends on the prosperity of the special interest, that because the trusts employ great numbers of people at reasonably good wages and certain pay, they make for the Nation's prosperity and that anything that proves to their detriment must hurt the prosperity of the country. Consequently they turn a willing ear not to the less highly attuned to such importunities by an inner consciousness that their political welfare will thereby be promoted. To President Taft falls the difficult task of promoting to the best of his ability those many ideals and policies wholly at variance with the views of his followers in Congress while he avoids a quarrel with the men whose power is such that they can easily render nugatory all his aims and purposes.

Five Years

of Heart Trouble Cured by Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had pains in my left side, and under my shoulder blade, could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath the least exertion would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. When I had taken six bottles I was cured."

MRS. C. C. GORKEY,
Northfield, Va.

If there is fluttering or palpitation it is an indication of a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the heart. It is not necessarily diseased—just weak from over-work. The heart may be weak just the same as the eyes, stomach or other organs. You can make a weak heart strong by taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. Get a bottle from your druggist, take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Trouble Makers Ousted.

When a sufferer from stomach trouble takes Dr. King's New Life Pills he's mighty glad to see his Dyspepsia and Indigestion fly, but more - he's tickled over his new, fine appetite, strong nerves healthy viger, all because stomach, liver and kidneys now work right. 25c. at H. Milliman's.

About the handiest books to have around the house are receipt and note books.. Almost every day people are called upon to give a receipt and occasionally to give or take a note. In consideration of these, The News has issued and bound up sets of note and receipt books that sell from 10c to 25c each.

Reports from different railroads show that the bulk of travel during the summer season is west. While the railroads are sending many tourists to all parts of the country, the large per centage travels to western points and the cause ascribed for this is the fact that numerous meetings are being held there. Special rates are in effect on the majority of the roads.

Convention Proceedings

The Township Sunday School Convened in full swing in Garrett last week at the Baptist church, beginning Tuesday morning, and at 9:30 o'clock, about fifty delegates and visitors being present. The president opened the meeting with a few remarks, and in the absence of Prof. J. E. Sturgis, the song service was conducted by Mr. Stewart of Garrett, followed by a devotional service under the leadership of Mrs. C. B. Jones of Garrett.

From 10 until 11 o'clock the subject of "True Elements of Power in Sunday School Work," was discussed. Mrs. M. A. Ehlers of Aburn, speaking on "Consecration;" Rev. Many new and interesting thoughts were presented. This was followed with a song by the convention. On account of the absence of several of the officers the appointing of committees was postponed until after the noon hour. The morning session closed with song, and benediction by Rev. Harper.

The program for the afternoon session was full of good things and was a real feast to the large number present. The meeting being opened by song service, conducted by Prof. Sturgis. Devotional, M. T. Musgrave of Auburn; (d) "Teacher", Rev. Brown Spencerville. Committee on Resolution — Rev. Harper, C. C. Woodcox, M. B. Willis.

Obituary Committee — The township presidents with Mr. Steward as chairman.

Several reports were presented from Sunday Schools which had not previously reported.

The evening program included a song service; vocal duet by Miss Margarent Spencer and D. S. Talbert, rendering Gounod's "Forever With the Lord."

At 7:30 Rev. W. A. Halpenny, State Secretary of Sunday Schools, was given the time and he took for his subject, "The Missionary Spirit," which he presented in a way that held his audience, as he is noted as an eloquent and forceful speaker. Singing by the male quartette, benediction by Mrs. Jones.

The Wednesday morning services opened at 9 o'clock with song service conducted by Prof. Sturgis; prayer by Rev. Halpenny, followed by the reading of the scriptural lesson by F. M. Beidler; song service by convention. The Teachers' Training Work was discussed by Rev. Halpenny in the absence of J. E. Worthington. J. E. Sturgis, the well-known musician of DeKalb county, rendered a violin solo.

The responsibility of the Sunday School in eliminating the saloon, was to have been discussed by Rev. Shirley of Ft. Wayne, but failed to arrive in time, and Revs. Sterling, Lenox, Lilly and Halpenny were called to talk on the subject. The program was interspersed with music and by this time Rev. Shirley had arrived and made an address on the liquor traffic. The discusions followed by Mrs. Jones. Song by convention. "The Power of an Idea," Rev. Metzler, followed by Revs. Kuhn and Wells. After song and benediction they adjourned until 1:00 o'clock.

The 1:00 o'clock song service conducted by Prof. Sturgis opened the program proper for the afternoon. Prayer by Mrs. Ehlers and song by convention. The home department, "The Sleeping Giant at the Church Door," was turned over to Rev. Halpennny for discussion and the thoughts presented should enthuse those interested in the welfare of the church and prompt them to more active work. Last week we failed to note the band concert given by the Coburntown band on our streets on the Saturday evening before. A large crowd was here to hear them and some fine music was rendered. It is not settled as to whether the concerts will be given each week or not, but it would be the thing for St. Joe to do. Entertain our customers when they come to town. They appreciate it.

With the closing of D. J. Ueber's place of business, last Saturday at 11 o'clock, Avilla's last saloon passed out of existance. A big business was did during the day and evening, but when the hour for final closing came no demonstration was made and everything passed off quietly. Kendallville's last saloon also closed Saturday.

At last I used Dr. King's New Discoxery, which completely cured me and now I am as well as ever." The Coletown base ball team played against our newly organized team last Saturday, and won the game by the score of 7 to 5. All are not only invited to attend this service but are expected to be present.

The Bowman drug store was broken into Saturday evening by some one who was familiar with the store, it is thought. An entrance was gained at a window in the rear of the building by making a hole in the glass and then reaching through and removing a board above, thus allowing the window to be shoved up. The tiger cigar machine had been touched for quite a number of nickles while the register had been opened but found empty. A money drawer below containing pennies was nearly stripped. The cigar and candy case had been opened but how much was taken is pretty hard to determine. The parties evidently found what they wanted and then made their escape.

Women Who Are Envied.

Those attractive women who are lovely in face, form and temper are the envy of many, who might be like them. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. To Mr. and Mrs. Edward Elliott, Ft. Wayne, Indiana:

Dear friends: — We, the DeKalb County Sunday Schools, in annual convention at Garrett desire to express to you our heartfelt sympathy in your sad affliction in the sudden death of your two sons. May our blessed Lord, who, when on earth, received the children to his arms and blessed them, comfort your hearts with the sweet thought that he has now welcomed your boys to his presence to go out no more forever, whose latest hour had been spent in studying his word of life. The time is short till all who love and serve him here shall be welcomed to the eternal home of peace and holiness.

Yours in the hope of his coming.

Caruso and the Exp.

Caruso, the great tenor, gave very freely to the earthquake victims in Sicily. He is always giving freely to charity. At the same time he is very proud. From boyhood he has repudiated all gifts himself. Once, in his youth, Caruso agreed to sing in Rome at a concert in aid of the poor. He had then only local fame. Moreover, he was not rich.

The Roman entertainment committee, in acknowledgment of the services, which had been very successful, invited Caruso to a luncheon, and placed before him, for first course, an egg in which 10 pieces of gold had been concealed. The tenor ate a mouthful or two, then his spoon clinked against the gold, and, seeing how the land lay, he stopped eating.

"But you must finish your egg," said one of his hosts.

"No, no," said he; "I never touch the yolk."

The committeeman frowned.

"But you don't throw it away?" he protested.

"No," said Caruso; "I leave it for the poor."

PERMANENT.

A Statement Confirmed After Five Years.

Elder A. Pickerill, 1303 W. Fourth St., Marion, Ind., says: "I was caused a good deal of misery by the painful passages of the Kidney secretions. I always felt dull and languid and suffered from severe pains across the loins. A number of remedies I tried failed to give relief, but

I used Doan's Kidney Pills and attribute to them my present good health. In 1900 I publicly endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills and have no hesitation now in confirming that statement."

Thirst for Knowledge.

"I will wait a moment," said the temperance lecturer at the close of his speech, "to answer any questions you may wish to ask."

"Can a person get drunk on sauerkraut?" inquired an earnest woman in the audience whose husband had signed the pledge.

PATH TO OLD AGE.

Former Mayor Says in His Case It Has Been Paved with Pie.

Everybody with a taste for pastry or a weakness for sweets will hail with joy the explanation of Smith Ely, mayor of old New York city in 1877-78 and now 85 years old, as to his prolonged life.

"Sweets did it," said Mr. Ely in an article contributed to Medico-Legal Journal. "I don't know that this diet of sweets has benefited my disposition, but it has given me strength to undergo the nervous strain and excitement of a political career in Albany, Washington and New York that would have shortened the existence of a beef eater.

"My parents, like many others," says Mr. Ely, "thought that sweets of any sort were unwholesome for children, and I enjoyed only such things in my childhood within strict limitations. Consequently, when I attained the age of 16 and found employment downtown, with permission to dine as I pleased, I made up for lost time. My regular meal for many months consisted of three or four pieces of baker's pie. At all periods of my life the dessert has almost always been the better part of the meal.

"I resided for more than twenty years in the neighborhood of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and during all that period it was my regular habit, on my way home from clubs and entertainments, to stop at Maillard's and have a meringue glace, followed by a cup of hot chocolate with whipped cream.

"It has been, and still is, my habit to place a lump of confectionery of some sort in my mouth upon retiring for the night."

The Poor Loser.

Mrs. Newlywed (indignantly)—You are the breadwinner of this family.

Mr. Newlywed (despairingly)—Well, considering the kind of bread you give me, I should call myself the loser. —Harvard Lampoon.

His Answer.

Pat, who was noted for a quick tongue, was digging potatoes when the parish priest came by. By way of a pleasant salutation the priest said:

"Good mornin' to ye, Pat, and what kind of p'rtatoes are ye diggin'?"

"Raw ones, your rlv-rence."

"Och, ye're so smart, I'll just give ye a question on the catechism. What is baptism?"

"It used to be 4 shillin's afore ye came, but now it's 20 shillin's."—The Circle.

When There's a Mixed Brood.

The Duckling—Yes, I've been trying to teach him to swim, ma'am; but he'll do better as a diver—he stayed under an awful long time.

Terrible Candor.

"What part of my book did you most enjoy?" asked the authorette as she brushed her hair over her eyes.

And after a moment's reflection Miss Cayenne answered:

"The cover design."—Exchange.

He Was Near It.

A small boy went into a drug store, wrinkled his face and rubbed his head in an effort to remember something that had escaped him.

"Say," he began, "will you tell me the name of the place where we Americans have so many soldiers?"

"Fort Sheridan?"

"Oh, no; it's farther away than that and a new place."

"The Philippines?"

"That ain't just it, but it's somewhere around there."

"Perhaps you mean Manila?"

"Manila! That's right! I knew I would get it after a while. I want a bottle of Manila extract for flavoring. They're goin' to have ice cream."—Boston Herald.

Barbara Was Overlooked.

Four-year-old Barbara went to church with her two sisters and came home crying.

"What is the matter, dear, inquired her mother.

"He preached a whole s-sermon—about—M-Mary and Martha," sobbed Barbara, "and—never said—a—word about me."

She—What's a franchise?

Son Spots.

"Who is that neglected-looking little boy with that awfully dirty face?"

Childish Wisdom.

Lady—Will you send this rug on approval?

Doctor—Yes, I believe so.

Old Maid (resignedly)—Oh, then, doctor, you needn't call again.

Courteous Highwayman.

"You don't mean to say you would accept this old timepiece?" faltered the man who was being held up.

"Why, it is only an apology for a watch."

"That's all right, friend," laughed the bold highwayman, "I'll accept the apology."—Chicago News.

So Sudden.

She—Yes; I adore a big, broad-shouldered, brainy, handsome-looking man.

He—Oh, darling! This is so sudden. —Columbia Jester.

A Trifle Acid.

"In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love."

"Yes," said the sarcastic damsel, "after the time for Christmas presents, valentines and Easter flowers has passed."—Kansas City Journal.

The Way Out.

"Think, love!" said Mrs. Gobsa Golde, "I ordered a dinner gown, and that tiresome dressmaker has sent me a traveling suit."

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" Gobsa Golde demanded.

"The only thing is for us to go abroad again," she sighed.

A Prize Surprise.

At a party composed of adults it was proposed that the entertainment consist of the games that prevailed in the good old days of childhood—"Post Office," "Tin-tin," "London Bridge," etc. Finally a prize was offered for the person who could make the "ugliest face." The judges awarded the prize to an old maid.

"You win," they said, handing her a box of bon bons.

"I will thank you," she replied indignantly, "to understand that I was not playing."—Kansas City Star.

Not Far From Pittsburg.

He was from Pittsburg, and wanted to telephone to a town about thirty miles away. He asked the girl on the switchboard to get him long distance and followed it up with asking the price.

"It will cost you fifty cents for three minutes," she said sweetly.

"Fifty cents! Ye gods!" cried the stranger. "I don't want to buy stock in the telephone company. I only want to talk a minute or so. Why, out in Pittsburg we can call up all hades for fifty cents!"

"Yes, I know sir," replied the girl, "but that is within your city limits." —N. Y. Telegraph.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

SECRET OF SPIRITUAL BEAUTY.

By Rev. James E. Sawyer, D. D.

"Unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ."

In man's finest and most useful creations there is the charm of symmetry. In noble architecture there is both strength and beauty. The nobler the example the more conspicuous the bleeding of these characteristics, as in Giotto's Campanile, at Florence, the lovely Church of St. Ouen, at Rouen, and the Cologne Cathedral. A great locomotive is a thing of beauty as well as of power. One of the most beautiful of all things is a great ship, the embodiment of triumphant power that makes the stormy ocean a safe highway.

In character God desires the best. His architecture in the building of character makes provision for symmetry as well as strength, for loveliness as well as personal power and marked individuality. There would be more symmetrical Christians if there was more study of His ideal of human nature and more co-operation with His spirit, which He gives without measure. Symmetry of Christian character is not an unattainable ideal. There have been many actual examples of it. Perfect examples of it are very rare, but that they do not exist is too much to say. Most of us have seen some people whose goodness was strong in all directions, and every element of strength enhanced their personal charm, their spiritual beauty. Among both the cultured and the uneducated we have known some in whom the beauty of holiness has been gloriously, though modestly, visible. Grace is a victorious principle. It never welcomes outwardly without at the same time working inwardly. There is nothing so broadening as a divine life in the heart. The individual spiritual life is in closest relationship with all the spiritual power in the universe; has vital fellowship with all goodness wherever it exists; has discernment, when divinely quickened, to see what is best and most beautiful in other human lives, and eagerly covets all excellencies as its own; for power to live an ample human life it draws upon all the resources of God.

Oftentimes some extraordinary development or manifestation of spiritual earnestness blinds us to the spiritual beauty and humility by which it is attended. Still oftener perhaps some lofty manifestation of spiritual loveliness in character veils the strength that all the while lies beneath it, as the verdure of a tree veils the stalwart branches that have triumphantly wrestled with the wildest and most angry winds, and are only the stronger for the conflicts endured.

For centuries the Christian Church seemed to see the passive elements in the character of Christ, and had only a weak, and unworthy conception of the Lord whom it adored. The manliness of Christ, as though newly discovered, fascinates the attention of our times. The evangelists saw it, and plainly portrayed it, though the Church so long failed to devote attention to it. There is no strength in God that is not in Jesus, "in whom dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Those who make Jesus more merciful than God, are equally in error. The gospel shows Him all gentleness and all strength, all purity and all mercy, all humility and all dignity, all meekness and all majesty, all truth and all love, solitary and most social, the perfect model of both the contemplative and the active life; manifesting the divine heart by His self-sacrifice, humiliation, and death, and manifesting the divine life and power by rising again. But how often in Christian theology the perfect spiritual beauty of Christ has been obscured. How often an imperfect conception has been presented, instead of the completeness of His living person. In like manner, the most symmetrical Christians are often but partially appreciated. Their spiritual beauty causes their force to be undervalued. Their activity, their earnestness, their self-denial, their laboriousness, their courage, are often but little recognized, because they are so happily blended with humility, gentleness and meekness. The most mature and complete Christians are those who have least self-assertion. Those who have closest communion with God are the ones who know not that their faces shine. A narrow Christian may be useful, but, like the thin edge of a wedge, mostly for splitting purposes. Those who heal and bind up and build up are such as have the fruit of the Spirit in a rich cluster of varied virtues.

Symmetrical Christians are not all alike. Of perfectly beautiful elm trees, no two will be duplicates. The individual gifts, the individual calling, the personal environment, will all have their influence in the fashioning of personal traits. The realm of spiritual beauty is broader than any field of nature. Spiritual types are not stereotypes. No growing man is altogether the same to-day that he was yesterday. Some saints are like stately pines, some like yielding willows, and some like oaks; but pine, willow and oak may each be well developed and symmetrical. Even men can make a great variety of constructions which equally manifest beauty and power. These blended elements are always present in the noblest architecture, in real poetry and mighty music, in swift ships and in that marriage of mind and matter to which we give the name of machinery. If man can build matter into endless variety of symmetrical forms, God can certainly do as much with souls as his material.

The Christian ideal is nothing less than human perfection. It has been embodied in Him who was sinlessly and ideally human because He was divine. Beholding and reflecting the glory of Jesus the Christ, our Lord, we are transformed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. The initial germ of the Christian life is glorious, for it is the inward life of God vitalizing and transforming the heart; and the development of this inward divine life is conditioned upon the contemplation and vision of the character of Jesus. In Him the active life and the devotional life were perfectly blended and the central principle of both His prayers and His deeds was love. The secret of His joy was self-sacrifice. The source of His power was humility. By dying He became the life of humanity. By self-renunciation He won universal empire over the minds and hearts of men.

The more perfectly we become acquainted with the character of Christ, the more completely we are conformed to Him, the more closely we follow in His steps, the more fully and the more harmoniously we shall be developed individually and socially. To imitate Christ, we must know Him; and this knowledge requires personal acquaintance and communion with Him, as well as the constant study of His life and His words. The most broadening, the most inspiring, the most creative of all knowledge is the knowledge of Jesus the Christ. Thereby comes the strength which is beauty, the weakness which is power, the humility and love which fill every avenue of activity with joyous, fruitful service.

CONSCIENCE NOT COWARDLY.

By Rev. P. A. Halpin.

Our glory is this, the testimony of our conscience.—2 Cor. 1: 12.

Paul's statement is the answer to the question. Does conscience make cowards of us all? It is an emphatic no. A gift of God, conscience could not be the curse it would be if it made its owner a victim of abject fear. It may make one afraid of the punitive sanction of the law. If so it is a salutary check, but does not unnerve. The best among us, when the blood burns and greed goads needs to have the awfulness of an offended Deity flashed terrifyingly upon him. Such a warning engenders a caution which implies courage, not pusillanimity. He of Tarsus when He calls conscience our glory lifts that faculty up to the dignity which is its by every right, divine and human.

Conscience makes us cowards? No! But it unmasks cowards. It reveals every character of which the fiber makes not for intrepidity. Where manhood is, conscience inspires prowess; where cowardice is, it exposes the aspen trembling of him who dares not battle for the right. Man's glory and man's shame come from the evidence of conscience. By its declaration he is acquitted or condemned. Its verdict garbs him with a glory which dazzles in the dark ways of life or accuses him of backsliding from high ideals into the slough of mean aspirations, corrupt desires and dishonest practices. The noblest thing we can say of a man is that his word is his bond, and that his bond is stronger than corporations or trusts or any of the associations of men.

"What has fortified such a man so impregnably is the courage with which he has followed the suggestion of conscience. As it bade, he gave to God what was God's and to Caesar what was Caesar's. No man can do more. Such a one, whether confronting the terror of unprecedented adversity or riding on the highest wave of prosperity, whether in war or in peace, in health or in sickness, in life or in death, whether summoned by God or by his fellows, is sublimely afraid.

Before the bar of unpurchasable justice the testimony of a man's conscience is the umpire of his fate, no matter what his creed may be. As he has treated his conscience here so will it deal with him then. Yet conscience is only the herald of the law. It gives light, but the strength which the will needs to obey its behests must descend from above. Here religion comes to the rescue. That religion must be heaven-born. No religion can prove that its charter is divine unless it make it irrefutably clear that it holds within its gift a light which so illumines conscience as to make it inerrant and endows man's will with a robustness which makes it indomitable.

A man whose conscience is so enlightened and whose will is so panoplied can never be a coward, but always and everywhere a hero.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't try to give this world a holy tone by drowning its walls with hymn tunes.

Don't overlook the fact that the value of a gift is measured by its real cost to the giver.

Don't forget that while you may sow your wild oats where none are looking, you can never reap them under those conditions.

Titles of books are misleading, especially if you do not look within. The story is told of a man, the brother of a scientist, who went to a bookshop to buy a present. He told the clerk that he wanted some kind of a volume dealing with natural history to give to his brother, a zoologist. Could he recommend one?

The clerk glanced over the shelves with a knowing air. At last he pulled down a book.

"This would interest him," he remarked. "It is by one of our best authors."

"Let me see it," said the purchaser.

The clerk handed it to him. On the back, in large letters, was the word "Anthology."

The Rev. K. Mowatt Laighly—Why, I cleared that all up in a sermon I preached last Sunday. I wish you could have heard it.—Chicago Tribune.

Trouble in the Court Room.

Disturbed by the frenzied oratory of the attorney for the defendant, a section of the plastering overhead fell, narrowly missing the judge.

"Fiat justitia, ruat coelling!" thundered the lawyer, undisturbed by the incident.

"Your honor," said the attorney for the plaintiff, "I object. The case calls for a better quality of court plaster than that!"

"Gentlemen," roared the judge, "if you were not brother Masons, I should fine both of you for contempt!"—Chicago Tribune.

YOUR BACKACHE WILL YIELD

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rockland, Maine.—"I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged, and thought I should never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and thought I would try it. After taking three bottles I was cured, and never felt so well in all my life. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends."—Mrs. WILL YOUNG, 6 Columbia Avenue, Rockland, Me.

Backache is a symptom of female weakness or derangement. If you have backache, don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so safely and surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Cure the cause of these distressing aches and pains and you will become well and strong.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has restored health to thousands of women.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge.

FASHION HINTS

For a little morning dress this would be attractive made of cotton voile. These voiles wash beautifully and this season they come in the prettiest patterns. They are most inexpensive which is another point in their favor

No Way of Finding Out.

One does not usually make a virtue of fault finding, but it seems, by Richard Grant White's experience, that it has its valuable part in social economy. Grumbling has always been considered a prerogative of John Bull, and not an agreeable one, but the incident taken from "England Without and Within" goes to prove that it has its uses.

I had been a little over a week in London lodgings, and had my breakfasts served by the housekeeper. One morning the maid said, as she took my tray:

"I'm afraid we sha'n't satisfy you, sir, with your breakfasts."

I told her my breakfasts were very good, that the tea, eggs, bacon, fish, muffins and marmalade were good enough for any man, and all I wished.

"Yes, but, you never grumble about anything you have, and so we don't know how to please you."

The Father's Comment.

"Father," said the young man, "I've decided to get married, now that my education is completed."

"Humph!" sneered the father. "Your education may be completed, but if you get married you'll find that your training has just begun."

AGONIZING ITCHING

Eczema for a Year—Got No Relief Even at Skin Hospital—In Despair Until Cuticura Cured Him.

"I was troubled by a severe itching and dry, scurfy skin on my ankles, feet, arms and scalp. Scratching made it worse. Thousands of small red pimples formed and these caused intense itching. I was advised to go to the hospital for diseases of the skin. I did so, the chief surgeon saying: 'I never saw such a bad case of eczema.' But I got little or no relief. Then I tried many so-called remedies, but I became so bad that I almost gave up in despair. After suffering agonies for twelve months, I was relieved of the almost unbearable itching after two or three applications of Cuticura Ointment. I continued its use, combined with Cuticura Soap and Pills, and I was completely cured. Henry Searle, Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 8 and 10, '07."

No Trouble About That.

"But how," they asked Jonah, "did the whale get back into deep water after depositing you on dry land?"

"I believe," said Jonah, "the commentators explain that on the theory that the whale waited for the return of high tide. Sounds reasonable, doesn't it?"

TWO KINDS OF TURKS.

Hospitality the Characteristic of the Man of the People.

Turks, however, are of two kinds—the government official and the man of the people—and of these the one is the very antithesis of the other. Just as the former is false, cruel, servile, arrogant and unjust, so is the latter simple, honorable and hospitable, says a writer in Collier's. Hospitality, indeed, is the Turk's greatest virtue. Should you travel among the true Turks in Asia Minor you will find, instead of inns and hotels, a warm welcome in every house. The chief men of the village will dispute with each other for the honor of being your host, and he who has won that privilege is envied by his neighbors. If not rich enough to afford a "moussafir odassi," or guest chamber, he will place his own room at your disposal; but wherever you may lodge, you will always find in large Turkish letters this traditional inscription: "Here is received the stranger! In the name of God! the compassionate! the merciful!"

Nor are introductions necessary. Whatever your creed or condition, your rank or your country, whether Christian or Moslem, wealthy or poor, you will be lodged and entertained as long as you choose to remain. While a guest you are not only not allowed to expend a penny, but are not even permitted to offer a "tip" to the servants, for this would be considered a great insult to your host. Nor must it be supposed that this is true only of the rich or the well-to-do; it is characteristic also of the poorest peasants. They do not wait simply to receive you; they will go out to find you. In many villages a guest chamber is kept at the public expense.

PRESSED HARD.

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When prominent men realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

A superintendent of public schools in one of the southern states says:

"My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making an official visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat peculiar flavor of the coffee, and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it, that after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family were so well pleased with it, that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was as well and hearty as the rest of us.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but not in so marked a degree as in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

REVIEW OF INDIANA

Leon Craig, of Terre Haute, aged 11, jumped in the Wabash river and rescued 6-year-old Gertrude Pafley, who had fallen from a houseboat.

Miss Lillian Brizius, of Evansville, 16 years old, ended her life by jumping into a cistern. It is believed she was despondent over a love affair.

Mrs. Amelia Hanafee, negress, wife of John Hanafee, of New Albany, died of lockjaw at St. Edward's Hospital. The malady developed recently from a slight injury received ten days ago.

Jacob J. Laptair, aged 61 years, died at his ohme in Staunton recently from the effects of poison, which he took with suicidal intent. A year ago Laptair's wife died, and he has since sought death in many ways. Five times he tried to kill himself, each attempt proving futile.

Earl Chamness, of Richmond, proprietor of a saloon, was seriously wounded by Arthur Chauncey. Chamness and Chauncey are relatives by marriage and during a quarrel Chamness is alleged to have attacked Chauncey who pulled a pocket knife and slashed Chamness several times.

In a damage suit against the Indianapolis Traction Company it was testified on behalf of Mattie Ennis, of Indianapolis, complainant, that an accident she suffered broke up her courtship with a young man who had promised to marry her. This and personal injuries were grounds for the charges against the company.

Crawford Fairbanks became sole owner of the Terre Haute House and Grand Opera House block. Mr. Fairbanks had been negotiating some time with the former operators of the hostelry, the Watson-Beggs Company. He intends building one of the most up-to-date hotels in the State. The consideration was not announced.

William Hall, of Evansville, a negro, caught a gang of white boys drinking and asked them for some. When they refused he pulled his gun and shot into the crowd, wounding Eurie Peck in the leg and the latter's brother, Annis Peck, in the shoulder. The boys seized the negro and would have lynched him had not officers rescued Hall. He was arrested.

George Lower, of Muncie, an employe of the big Mock stone quarry, east of Muncie, was probably fatally shot while fishing along White river. The 5-year-old son of Jacob Gordon was the cause of the accident by the careless use of a thirty-two-caliber rifle which his father permitted him to fire. The bullet that struck Lower entered the body to the right of the stomach.

President E. B. Bryan, of Franklin College, opened the commencement week program, preaching the baccalaureate sermon. This is the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the local school. There are thirty-six members of the class, with two graduates in music. Julian S. Bryan, the 18-year-old son of the President, is the youngest member ever graduated from the local school.

The case of Christian Siebold, a Bluffton livery man, charged with fast automobile driving in Fort Wayne, was continued. Siebold ran into and completely demolished a cab in Main street. In the machine with him were Del Locke and Frank Fry, also of Bluffton. Joseph Widemann, a laborer, is the sixth victim of auto mishaps in Fort Wayne in three days. He has a broken arm and some bad bruises.

For some time George Reberger, of Brazil, county commissioner, has been trying to rid his farm of crows. They assembled on this farm, along the traction line east of Brazil, in great numbers and did a great deal of damage. Yesterday he shot into a bunch of them, killing three. He was surprised to find that one of them was snow white, not a single black feather being visible. He took it to a taxidermist, who will mount it.

The Factory Promoting Club of Brazil sold the last two lots in the Oak Park addition, which raises the factory fund to $144,000, in addition to the $45,000 raised sixty days ago. The successful sale of these lots gets the large plant of the Knight-Brunkerhoff Piano Company, of Charlotte, Mich., a ware company, involving a half million dollars, and the new plant of the American Sewer Pipe Company, costing $100,000. Work on the new factories will be started next week.

A party was given at the home of Miss Pink Likens, near Jasonville. About twenty-five young women and as many young men were present. All were dressed as children. The young men wore short trousers and wide collar shirts and represented the small boys of today, while the young women wore girl's dresses. The evening was spent in children's games, dropping the handkerchief, dressing dolls and playing with little wagons and marbles. Each guest spoke "a piece" or sang a song.

The City Council of Ligonier has granted the Ligonier School Board the square opposite the Carnegie library for the purpose of erecting the proposed High School building. Work will commence on the building at once.

Joseph Cooprider, of Clay City, picked up in the bed of a small water course a formation which all who have seen it believe is a petrified human foot. In outline the object resembles a foot, although the toes are missing.

Rev. William E. Hunter, just graduated from the McCormick Theological Seminary, has been called as pastor of the Ossian Presbyterian church

Alfred Bordaman, of Marion, 40 years old, while engaged in pulling drive pipe from an abandoned oil well, three miles southeast of Van Buren, was instantly killed, by being struck in the head by a flying pulley which broke from its fastenings. The top of his skull was torn away. Bordaman is survived by a widow and four children.

"Uncle" William Kelso, of Petersburg, aged 80 years, the biggest man in Pike County, died recently. He could easily shoulder a two-bushel sack of wheat with one hand and carry a sack on each shoulder, until a few years ago. He was the strongest man of his time there and during his life, through hard labor, amassed a small fortune.

George I. Winans, of Shelbyville, recently bought a number of chickens from Ben Kokentied, who lives in Flatrock, Shelby County. Thomas J. Noblitt purchased two of the chickens from Kokentied. When one of the chickens was cleaned a nugget of pure gold was found in its craw. It is thought the hen picked up the gold where more of the precious metal can be found, and the feeding place of these chickens will be closely watched.

E. S. Ricketts, of Terre Haute, while spading in his garden, dug up a tomato can containing a roll of currency. From appearances the bundle had been buried several years, and it was in such a condition that it could not be examined. Mr. Ricketts has turned it over to a bank for examination. The discovery has revived old stories concerning a miser who lived there about twenty years ago. It is also said that the house was at one time occupied by two men who were suspected of receiving stolen goods.

William Jennings Bryan refused to give the Ladies' Aid Society of the Ripple M. E. church, in Shelby Township, near Shelbyville, 10 cents for their festival held the latter part of the week. In a kind letter he said he was called on so much for small donations that he had to refuse them all. The women had a silk quilt with 1,026 names on it, and it was sold to Perry Amos for $17. The names of many prominent men were on it, each person whose name was on the quilt paying 10 cents. The society received $119.60 for the quilt.

Merrit Toogins is dead at his home near Correct, as a result of being shot last April while at work in Tennessee. Mr. Toogins at the time, with a partner, was operating a phosphate fertilizing plant which was on the land of a relative of the partner. After some disagreement the relative ordered the men off the land, the shooting resulting. Mr. Toogins was paralyzed by the bullet. Although he underwent an operation he gradually grew worse. He is survived by a widow and several children.

Sheriff John W. Ader, of Danville, has returned from Michigan City, where he went to take Robert Jolly, the Indianapolis murderer, who was found to be insane, to the Indiana colony for the criminal insane. Jolly killed his 9-year-old daughter Gladys, at Indianapolis, June 12, 1907, by pouring carbolic acid down her throat. Jolly did not like the verdict of insanity, and attempted to take the stand in order that he might tell the jury he was guilty, in the hope that they would find him guilty and sentence him to death. Sheriff Ader says Jolly insisted until the last that he should have been executed.

Bones found in the ruins of the burned home of Coben Salters in Muncie have led the authorities to institute an investigation on the theory that Salters might have been burned up. The last time Salters was seen was shortly before the blaze, when he entered his home with the intention of going to bed. Salters and his family had been visiting in Indianapolis prior to the fire for about a month. He returned unaccompanied by his family. One mysterious phase of the affair is that it has been reported that a wagon from a local second-hand store took away some of Salter's household furniture.

In order that their 9-year-old daughter might meet Governor Marshall, Morris F. Quinn and wife brought her to Indianapolis from their home, nine miles north of Anderson. The little girl was so pleased with the pictures of the Governor during the campaign that she obtained a promise that her parents would bring her there to see him. Lately the parents found that the child was losing sleep because she hadn't seen the Governor, so they made the trip. They showed her the State Museum first, but she wanted to visit the Governor, and an interview was obtained when her story was told to Colonel Thistlewaite, the Governor's secretary.

Immediately after the marriage of Miss Beryl Garrison to Eno Nation at Muncie, they were seized by a party of friends, handcuffed together, taken to the stage of a theater and introduced to a large audience of people.

Harrison F. Crabill, 86 years of age, residing in Smith Township, Whitley County, suddenly lost his hearing a few days ago. Mr. Crabill retired in his usual health, awakening the following morning to find himself totally deaf.

VIENNA'S PLAGUE OF PIGEONS.

Means of Ridding City of Birds Becomes a Municipal Problem.

Vienna is suffering from too many pigeons, and the authorities are at a loss to know what to do to mitigate the nuisance. The birds, which number some thousands, have a privileged existence; no body molests them in any way, so that they flourish and increase rapidly.

Recently so many complaints have been received from house owners of the dirty condition of the facades of buildings caused by the pigeons, that the Vienna magistracy decided something must be done to reduce the number. In their perplexity the magistracy appealed to the Vienna Society for the Protection of Animals to aid them in a legal slaughter of the offending birds, always having regard, however, to the provisions of the new birds protection law.

The society answered that it would be hardly consistent with the principles of friendliness toward animals to engage in a massacre of pigeons and therefore they must reject the official appeal.

The magistracy are now wrestling with the problem alone. Perhaps the unemployed of Vienna might help them.

People Tell Each Other About Good Things.

Fourteen years ago few people in the world knew of such a preparation as a Powder for the Feet. To-day after the genuine merit of Allen's Foot-Ease has been told year after year by one gratified person to another, there are millions who would as soon go without a dentifrice as without Allen's Foot-Ease. It is a cleanly, wholesome, healing antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, which has given rest and comfort to tired and aching feet in all parts of the world. It cures while you walk. Over 30,000 testimonials of cures of smarting, swollen, perspiring feet. It prevents friction and wear of the stockings and will save in your stocking bill ten times its cost each year. Imitations pay the dealer a larger profit, otherwise you would never be offered a substitute when you ask for Allen's Foot-Ease, the original powder for the feet. Imitations are not advertised because they are not permanent. For every genuine article there are many imitations. The imitator has no reputation to sustain—the advertiser has. It stands to reason that the advertised article is the best, otherwise the public would not buy it and the advertising could not be continued. When you ask for an article advertised in this paper, see that you get it. Refuse imitations.

The Old-Fashioned Bonnet.

How dear to my heart is the old-fashioned bonnet,
The old-fashioned bonnet that Nell used to wear;
Without any plums and red cherries stuck on it—
The bonnet that didn't require phony hair.

The waste-paper basket that's lately come in
May be quite the rage and recherche and cunning,
But give me the hat she tied under her chin.

Deciding the Ownership.

Two bosom friends were at odds over the ownership of an umbrella. "I tell you it's mine," persisted the first man.

"And I say that umbrella's mine," asserted the other.

"You're wrong. I've had it for six months at least. See the initials, 'L. S.'?"

"Yes, but they're not your initials."

"No; they're the initials of the man I borrowed it from."—Lippincott's.

KEEP BABY HEALTHY; FREE

No child can be well and strong unless its bowels move regularly every day at the same hour. Such regularity promotes good health. One passage is absolutely necessary, while two are not too many.

There is one remedy that is especially adapted to the needs of children, and which thousands of American mothers are using to-day, and that is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the great herb laxative compound. Its gentle action, so free from griping, its tonic effects, and its perfect purity, vouched for to the United States government, makes it an ideal children's laxative tonic.

Mrs. M. F. Cash, of Webb, Okla., is an old-time friend of this wonderful child's remedy and she says she could scarcely keep house without it. She became acquainted with it through Dr. Caldwell's offer of a free trial bottle, which she found so effective on her baby that she now always keeps it in the house. Mrs. K. L. Stout, of Louisville, Ky., also first used it in a free sample, then bought it of her druggist at the regular price, which is only 50 cents or $1 a bottle. It gave her little girl a splendid appetite and a vigorous stomach. Where Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin once finds its way into the home it makes a life-long friend. They soon discard salts, pills and powders.

Those who have never yet used Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin should begin to do so, for they are missing a valuable household friend. In order to acquaint you with its merits at no expense to yourself the doctor will send you a free test bottle on receipt of name and address. It has been justly called the nation's safeguard to health in the cure of constipation, dyspepsia, heartburn, liver trouble, sick headache, sour stomach and similar digestive ailments.

If there is anything about your ailment that you don't understand, or if you want any medical advice, write to the doctor, and he will answer you fully. There is no charge for this service. The address is Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION.

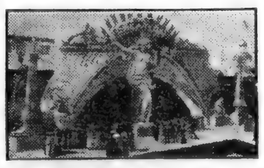
Chicago's Greatest Amusement Enterprise Completed at a Cost of $5,000,000.

None of Chicago's other marvelous achievements equal the great amusement enterprise it has just launched, RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION.

This exposition surpasses everything of its character since the original World's Fair. Five million dollars was expended to make it a crowning gem in Chicago's coronet of beautiful parks. Last season 7,600,000 persons visited the exposition. This year it will accommodate 10,000,000. A trip to Chicago would be incomplete without a visit there.

RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION surpasses Caesar's ancient Circus Maximus where 5,000 dancers entertained Rome. Five thousand dancers could be lost in any one of its courts, esplanades, causeways or wooded groves. That many show girls, trick riders, Indians and cowboys are used in its "Frontier Day Fetes" alone.

Twice as many are accommodated in the amphitheater, where Mexican bull fights occur. Wild bulls and daring Toreadors daily enact thrilling contests for life and death. A Spanish band of 100 pieces discourses national music. Many military bands render open air concerts. The industrial exhibit includes wireless telegraphy, flying machines, dirigible balloons, aeroplanes and other mechanical marvels.



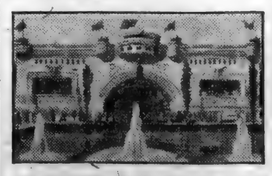
RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION'S matchless attraction is "The Creation." This stupendous scenic spectacle, animated by Biblical characters of the Garden of Eden, is destined to attract world-wide attention. It is the product of the genius of E. W. McConnell, builder of several world's fairs, and his staff of a hundred artists.

The scene is the Valley of the Euphrates, where tradition locates Eden. Awed spectators view as near to its reproduction as man may conceive. The great religious drama closely follows the Scripture.

"There is first a void, then darkness, dawn and light; separation of the sky, the earth and the waters; the beginning of life in the air and the waters, birds and fishes, creeping and crawling things, celestial anthems of unseen spirit bands; the creation of Adam and Eve, their temptation, transgression and expulsion by Angel Gabriel, who drives them forth with a flaming sword."

A great $25,000 pipe organ intones appropriate music. Its deep tubes produce thunder, and its flute-like notes the mimicry of forest small life. Flashes of lightning and angry storms are made by electrical and water effects. Space forbids an adequate description of this magnificent spectacle.

Another great novelty is "The Races," an English panorama. Fifty horses attached to chaises race over the highway to Coventry.



RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION'S "Court of Honor" has never been equaled since the Ancient Hanging Gardens of Babylon. Its center is a lagoon of crystal water, through which flash myriads of silver and gold fish. The limpid edges are fringed with emerald lawn set in rows of stately Lombardy poplars. Cascade fountains play prismatic sprays high overhead and cooling mists float downward into the lagoon. Fantastic facades and white pavilions gleam through the trees as a marble setting for the beautiful landscape.

"Over Niagara Falls" reproduces on a mammoth scale the famous waterfalls.

The inspiring strands of great bands, softer tones of orchestras, sounds of merriment from joyous throngs, sunlit waters and forestry, gay show-places, the whirr of aerial cars and flying machines, whistles of miniature railroads, vocalisation of the animals of "Circle D Ranch," chanting Indians, the familiar "rooting" enthusiasts in the baseball park, the silent onward movement of the river that courses through the great park, and millions of activies that impart pleasure, mystery and delight, make RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION a place of magic, the like of which the world has never seen.

On her third birthday little Elizabeth was allowed, as a special concession, to postpone going to bed until eight o'clock. As she stood at her bedroom window she saw for the first time in her life the full moon in all its silvery glory.

Wild Flowers in the South.

One morning you drive through the woods and see nothing but the usual green of winter; two days after on the same road you behold afar what seems to be a huge white sheet showing through the tree trunks and bushes. It is not a sheet, merely a solid curtain of Cherokee roses, waxy white, fragrant and blooming so thickly that only here and there is any green to be seen.

A big dead tree that has been showing gray and hideous for months turns over night into an enormous purple bouquet; it is the work of a wistaria, sending down showers of lavender sweetness with every puff of wind. Sweet olive, bridal wreath, wild jassamine and 50 others rush into a prodigality of bloom that seems a wicked, delightful extravagance to northern eyes, and the noble army of lilies marches up the side of each path and waves its banners beneath every wall.—Pass Christian correspondence St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Strange Bird Is Killed

For some time two large birds have been seen around the home of Mac Leighty, northeast of St. Joe. The size and peculiar habits of the bird attracted attention, and last week Cadmus Woodcox, who was painting their at the time, succeeded in shooting one of the pair. The body was rather small, but the wing spread was remarkable, measuring three feet and eight inches from tip to tip.

A search of the meadow disclosed the nest which was built of large sticks and lined with coarse grass, resting flat upon the ground. The four eggs it contained are as large as small hen's eggs, of a bluish white color, one of which can be seen in the News office window. The bird belongs to the falcon family and all domestic fowls are its prey. It is fortunate that that the one was killed as the otherone left the neighborhood when the nest was destroyed.

France's Troubles

Scandals have again broken out in French army circles, and high officials are accused of selling offices and promotions. The custom, which prevailed under the Bourbons, was suppressed by Napoleon, but became prevalent again under the last empire. So general did this barter and sale of any appointments become under Louis Napoleon that it was one of the main causes of the disastrous overthrow of the French in their war with Germany. The first Napoleon's success was largely due to the fact that army promotions were won by merit only. The French government has taken cognizance of the current charges, and a thorough house cleaning of its military establishment may be expected.

The Strike Still On

The B. & O. strike at Garrett is still on. Since the apprentice machinists who have served two and three years of their time walked out at the local shops last Thursday morning in sympathy with the striking machinists there have been no developements in the strike situation. The B. & O. is building a fence around the shops to protect the strikebreakers from any danger and is evidently expecting a long siege. The strikers are likewise determined to fight to a finish. There have been expectations the boiler makers and pipe fitters would also walk out, but there have been no developements along that line so far.

A Forger Nipped

Marion Howey, aged 22 years, was arrested Friday afternoon at Auburn by Sheriff Ralph Thomas, for forgery. For some time the Auburn merchants have been victimized and the writer of the checks was unknown until Thursday night when it was discovered that Howey was the party wanted. The Auburn merchants had been warned to look out for such checks and on Thursday night he attempted to pass a check off to Schabb Bros. & Co., and they immediately notified the sheriff and the lad was taken in. After his arrest he was identified by the parties to whom he had passed the bogus checks. He pleaded guilty and was given from 2 to 14 years in the Jeffersonville penitentiary and was taken there Saturday. Serves him right.

Ind. Music Teachers

Through the courtesy of Miss Allie Goldsmith, County Secretary of the Indiana State Music Teachers Association, we are permitted to print the following concerning the next convention.

LaFayette, Ind., is to entertain the Indiana Music Teachers' Association on the occasion of its thirty-second annual convention, which meets Tuesday, June 29th., for a four days' session. This association was organized at Columbus, Indiana, the last week of June, 1877, and in the thirty-two years of its existence, has visited every part of the state, scattering its beneficent influences far and wide. There is not a single reputable music teacher, music student or musician in the state who is not more or less influenced by the work of the association It makes no difference whether its conventions happen to have been held in his or her home town or not, the musical atmosphere of Indiana has been changed by the work of the association and he or she has prospered more or less as a result.

It seems only fair then, that every teacher, student and musician in the state should identify himself with the association, and by his membership, attendance at its meetings, if possible, friendly interest and moral support, help it to still farther broaden its field, enhance its influence, and extend its beneficial results.

The program for the 1909 convention both for its literary and musical excellence, is by far the greatest in the history of the association. Mr. Oliver Willard Pierce, of Indianapolis, chairman of the program committee, has, with the aid of his committee, have wrought wonders in its compilation and it only remains for every teacher and friend of music to join this association and be present at its LaFayette convention to make it a record breaking occasion in every way.

Post Graduate Course

Beginig this year a Post Graduate Course will be added to the piano course for those who desire to study specialties and beyond the regular course as some have stated. Graduation is not the end, but a standard or completion of a set course, like High School.

The course will cover one to two years and to complete it the requirements will be a full piano recital, memorized, not less than ten numbers; fifteen concert pieces memorized, a course in harmony, composition and a teacher's preparatory review, musical history and one concerto.

A few conservatories offer such a course and there is little beyond it except specialization.

Taxes Distributed

The Auburn Dispatch gives some figures concerning the amount of tax collected this spring, amount for distribution, etc. It was stated that $172,850.03 awaited distribution to the twenty-two different corporations including state, county and local funds. Of this sum $35,502.44 goes to the state, but only $32,794.10 arises from taxation, the difference growing out of the interest on school money, court fees and the like. The county gets $39,310.86 leaving a net sum of $100,745.07 for the local corporation funds such as township, school, special school, road, etc. Below is given the list of townships cities and towns and their respective amounts which will be turned over to them this month:

Buffalo Bill at Wayne.

Considerable interest has been aroused in this vicinity through the announced appearance of Buffalo Bill's Wild West and Pawnee Bill's Far East at Fort Wayne, July 7th.

Col. Wm. F. Cody, the original and only "Buffalo Bill," travels with the big exhibition and positively appears at every performance, rain or shine Arrangements have been made with the railroad officials to run excursions at special rates from the various stations along the line and there will be special provisions for the accommodation of those who wish to visit the exhibition. To the small boy and grown up, Buffalo Bill will be the chief attraction, for his fame is not dimmed by the years which have elapsed since he helped write the story of the west through his heroic deeds. One of the principal contests of the redmen, in which he took active part, will be pictured in the open-air melodrama. The Battle of Summit Springs, an engagement in minature introducing more than one hundred Indians and as many cavalrymen and soldiers. Contrasted with this scene will be An Oriental Spectacle which will picture the gorgeous beauties of the Far East, its pageantry and people, its pleasures and pastimes, and its strange costumes and customs. Turning again to American history there will be An Attack Upon an Emigrant Train. A Holiday at "T-E" Ranch, and The Great Train Hold-Up by Indians, showing varied pictures of early life upon the boundless plains. Rossi's Musical Elephants will be a particular feature of the Far East scene, and as an individual feature of the Wild West section of the exhibition Ray Thompson's Trained Western Range Horses will be shown in feats of grace and equine skill. Sharpshooting by Johnny Baker will be a particular attractive feature, and a bunch of bucking bronchos will furnish the principal comedy element of a truly exhilarating and strenuous exhibition.

Unlicensed Teachers' Pay.

The state board of education has made a ruling to establish a basis for salaries of public school teachers who do not hold licenses, but who are enabled to teach by virtue of certificates from accredited schools. Under the law, the minimum pay of school teachers cannot be less than a specified per cent, of the average grade made in the examination under which the license was granted. The question of establishing a basis for minimum pay for teachers who do not hold licenses has been before the board a number of times, and in order to adjust the matter it has been ordered that the basis of pay for a first year teacher, teaching under a certificate, shall be the same as that for a licensed teacher who made an average grade of 85 per cent, while second and third year teachers shall receive minimum wage equal to that paid teachers who have made general averages of 90 per cent. This order will be effective in the employment of teachers for the 1909-1910 school year.

FEATURES OF INTEREST

ABOUT THAT WHICH HAS BEEN AND IS TO BE.

All Sides and Conditions of Things are Shown. Nothing Overlooked to make it Complete.

Blood Feud in Mississippi.

Two men are dead, two were perhaps fatally wounded and three others slightly injured due to a bloody street battle at Meadville, Miss., waged by parties to a bitter feud that had been previously marked with tragedy. As a result of the affair feeling runs high and State troops were rushed to Meadville from Brookhaven to guard against the possibility of rioting. Those killed were Dr. A. M. Newman, clerk of the chancery court of Franklin County, and Silas G. Reynolds. Dr. Lenox Newman, a son of one of the slain men, is believed to have been fatally injured and Herbert Applewhite, an attorney, may not recover as the result of his wounds.

Big Shipment of Alligators.

What is said to be the largest consignment of alligators ever shipped over a railroad left New Orleans, La., a few days ago for Los Angeles, Cal. There was a full carload of the reptiles, comfortably enconsed in large vessels, partly filled with water. The rate on the shipment proved a tangled problem for the railroad officials. A diligent search failed to find the word alligator in any of the tariff books and it was finally decided to apply the rate on "animals not otherwise specified." The freight charges amounted to $900.

Big Piano Plant Burned.

The big five-story plant of Hardman, Peck & Co., manufacturers of pianos, in West Forty-eighth street, New York City, was practically destroyed by fire that for a time threatened the destruction of much property in that locality. The fire spread to the New York plant of the Pabst Brewing Company, which adjoined the piano factory and fanned by a stiff wind, quickly consumed the stables of the Pabst plant and set fire to the main plant. The loss is estimated at from $300,000 to $400,000.

Fire at Etna Green, Ind.

Etna Green, Ind., was visited by its most disastrous fire. Four two-story blocks were destroyed within two hours and the loss is estimated at $40,000. Thomas M. Jones, one of the heaviest losers, discovered the fire. He says that from the evidence as he found it at first, an incendiary caused the loss. Others say that there was no tangible evidence of anything of that kind but that the fire probably was due to spontaneous combustion.

Horse Thieves Fall Out.

Joseph Schow, aged 36 years, colored, of Gary, Ind., formerly of Marion, was shot by an unknown negro from Gary at Croker's because he feared Schow would reveal the fact concerning a stolen horse which the men were trying to take to South Bend. Schow will live, although his left eye is blown out, his chin mashed and his right hand blown off. Officers are searching for his assailant in the sandhills.

General Kountz Dead.

General John S. Kountz, past commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, died at his home in Toledo, Ohio, of Bright's disease. DR. E. E. HALE IS DEAD; END COMES SUDDENLY Famous Preacher and Chaplain of the Senate Expires at Roxbury, Mass.

WAS AN AUTHOR OF NOTE.

Born in 1822 of Revolutionary Stock and Showed Precocity as Child —Ordained at Age of 20.

Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, chaplain of the United States Senate, died at his home in Roxbury, Mass., Thursday. A week previous he was present at a celebration in honor of the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, his contemporary in many of the reform movements with which both had been identified for more than fifty years. At the bedside were Mrs. Hale, Philip L. Hale, a son; Ellen, a daughter, and the family physician.

As an advocate of world peace and a humanitarian whose activities have been many and forceful, Dr. Hale, who was pastor emeritus of the old South Church of Boston, which pulpit he filled regularly from 1856 until 1900, had a career of usefulness that is unique in American history.

Born in Boston April 3, 1822, Dr. Hale came of famed New England stock. His father, Nathan Hale, was a nephew of the patriot whose dying utterance, "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country," is graven deeply in the chronicles of the nation's struggle for liberty. His mother was a sister of Edward Everett, for whom her son was named.

It has been said of Dr. Hale that "he was cradled in the sheets of a newspaper," for his father was publisher of the Boston Advertiser, the first daily to be published in New England. Educated for a life of letters, the boy made rapid strides in school, and at 17 was graduated from Harvard University. At 20 he was licensed to become a minister. He regarded war as a barbarism which settled only questions of military strength and not questions of right and wrong, and he had a large part, as editor of the Peace Crusade, in bringing about The Hague tribunal. As an author, in which his aim was moral rather than artistic, Dr. Hale produced several enduring works.

In defiance of advancing years, Dr. Hale continued in the public eye until stricken by his last illness. On the death of Dr. William H. Milburn, the blind chaplain of the Senate, Dr. Hale succeeded him, his hoary head and rugged frame making an impressive figure in that chamber.

ARMY CAPTAIN IS SHOT.

Enraged Soldier Probably Fatally Wounds J. C. Raymond at Fort.

Captain John C. Raymond, of Troop B, Second United States Cavalry, and a member of one of the most prominent army families in the country, may die as the result of a wound received in a shooting affray at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, Sunday.

Upon being reprimanded by Captain Raymond for overstaying his leave of absence from the post, Corporal Lisle Crabtree drew a revolver and began firing at his commanding officer. The first bullet went wild, the second struck Sergeant James H. Washburn, the third hit Captain Raymond and the fourth found a victim in Corporal Elijah Such. The enraged trooper then turned the pistol on himself and fired the remaining bullet into his heart. With the exception of Captain Raymond, none of the four is considered seriously injured. Immediately after the shooting Major Bratton, surgeon of the regiment, had the officer removed to Mercy Hospital in Des Moines in a special street car, where an X-ray examination showed that the bullet had entered the front of Captain Raymond's neck and passed through, striking the backbone. His body is completely paralyzed from the neck down and only slight hopes are entertained for his recovery. Even if the injured officer should live it is probable that he will be paralyzed.

Captain Raymond is a son of Brigadier General Charles W. Raymond, of the engineer corps, retired. He is 37 years old and was graduated from West Point in 1897. He is married and has two children.

SON OF SIAMESE TWIN KILLED.

Jesse Bunker, Deaf-Mute, Is Slain by Lightning in His Barn.

Jesse Bunker, a deaf mute, youngest son of Chang, one of the famous Siamese twins, was killed by lightning in his tobacco barn in Surry County, N. C. He and his son and a workman took shelter in a barn during a rainstorm. Bunker's hat and shoes were torn to pieces, but the body was not bruised or mutilated. The son and workman were knocked senseless, remaining in this condition for an hour or more. Bunker was 43 years old and prosperous. He was intelligent and entertaining and enjoyed conversing with his friends through the medium of pencil and paper. The famous twins married Virginia women. The sons of the Siamese have all been well-to-do and prosperous men. The peculiar inheritance of deafness was an affliction that added an additional strangeness to the family.

SHOWS DECREASE IN SMALLPOX.

Government Surgeon Urges More Care in Vaccination.

"The experience of Germany, where compulsory vaccination has been in force for thirty years, proves conclusively that smallpox as existing in the United States is entirely unnecessary." Epitomized, this is the conclusion of Henry S. Mathewson, passed assistant surgeon, Public Health and Marine Hospital service, in a bulletin just issued in Washington. He declares that vaccination and revaccination cannot be too strongly urged. Dr. Mathewson has collected statistical data to prove that during the past five years smallpox in the United States has shown a steady decrease. In 1902 there were reported 54,014 cases, with 2,083 deaths; during 1906 there were reported 12,503 cases, with 90 deaths. The latest figures gathered show that the total of cases in this country from Dec. 26, 1908, to June 11 last, was 11,701, with a death rate of only 52.

BUILDING FALLS, KILLING FOUR.

Workmen Buried Alive in Collapse of Stove Plant at Detroit.

A six-story storehouse at the plant of the Peninsular Stove Company, 8th and Fort streets, Detroit, collapsed shortly before noon Saturday and four workmen were buried in the heap of wreckage. Three bodies have been recovered. A number of persons were injured. The store house was thirty-two years old and had been used by the stove company for a warehouse for more than twenty-five years. The upper floors of the building were well filled with the finished product of the plant. With no warning the top floor suddenly sagged and then gave way with a crash. Each of the lower floors sank in turn under the burden of falling stoves and debris. A fire which was discovered in the basement of the ruined building was soon extinguished.

It is reported on good authority that J. P. Morgan & Co. have underwritten $15,000,000 of the $60,000,000 of bonds to be issued by the Chicago Great Western Railroad.

The Soo Railroad Company has let the contract for the construction of 220 miles of track from Moose Lake on the Duluth line to Thief River Falls on the Winnipeg line.

conditions for the month of May than in the corresponding month of last year are indicated in preliminary reports of the principal Western railroads.

The stockholders of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company have been called to a meeting at which plans for the merging of twenty-one subsidiary lines under one corporation will be executed. This will not affect the Iron Mountain lines, however. When this is done the stock of the company will be increased from $100,000,000 to $240,000,000, or about the total of the capital stock of the lines involved.

The new train service which the Burlington and Northern Pacific systems have combined to put in force between Chicago and Seattle to make close connection with the Pennsylvania's eighteen-hour flier from New York is expected to result in the transmission of mail and passengers from New York to Seattle in four days. The actual schedule time for this service is ninety-five hours and thirty-five minutes for coast to coast. The Burlington and Northern Pacific also has put on another train leaving Chicago at night and due to reach Seattle in seventy-two hours.

FIVE SHOT IN MISSISSIPPI FEUD.

Troops Ordered to Meadville After Slaying of Two Men.

Dr. A. M. Newman, chancery clerk of Franklin County, Mississippi, recently acquitted of the charge of killing Cornelius Prichard on April 26, was shot down in his buggy Monday afternoon in Meadville. Silas Reynolds, a young man who was near Newman's buggy, was also killed and three men were injured. The shooting is the outgrowth of the Newman-Prichard feud, which has continued in Franklin County for some years. After the acquittal of Newman and the release of his two sons on light bonds feeling ran high. Monday as Dr. Newman was riding past the Butler Building, a two-story structure, a volley of shots were fired at him from persons in the building. Dr. Newman was killed outright. His two sons, Ernest and Lenox, ran to his assistance and were wounded, the latter receiving what is believed to be a fatal wound. Herbert Applewite, a lawyer, was in range and was shot in the leg. He was one of the bystanders who was wounded when Prichard was killed. It is said a man named Boyd, who was a witness against Newman, fired the shot that killed him.

TRY TO ASSASSINATE A MAYOR.

Attempt to Burn House of Executive in Town in Ohio Is Made.

What is believed to have been an attempt to assassinate Mayor William R. Niven and burn his residence in Bellefontaine, Ohio, was made the other day when a burning bottle filled with kerosene was thrown through the large plate-glass window of his house. Curtains, carpets and all furniture in the room were set on fire, but the department quickly extinguished them. The mayor was away from home at the time. Mayor Niven was elected on a "dry" ticket two years ago. He is a well-known democratic politician, a member of the State committee, and last year made the race for Congress.

Acting on representations made by Henry P. Fletcher, charge d'affaires of the American legation in Pekin, China has agreed not to ratify the foreign loan of $27,500,000 from British, German and French bankers for the construction of the Hankow-Szechuen railroad. It is expected that this refusal, coupled with the representations made by the American ambassadors in London, Paris and Berlin, will result in arrangements being made in Europe for American participation in the loan.

THOUSANDS ATTEND CEREMONY

Governors Send Laudatory Messages Which Are to Be Given to the "Conquerors of the Air."

The achievement of man-flight, for which men have striven for more than 4,000 years, was celebrated in Washington Thursday. After receiving homage from the rulers of Europe, Wilbur and Orville Wright, of Dayton, Ohio, on that day received their first public recognition by their fellow countrymen. In the east room of the White House President Taft presented to the inventors the gold medals awarded to them by the Aero Club of America to commemorate the invention of the first successful flying machine.

The event was one of national interest. The governors of the various States sent laudatory messages congratulating the Wrights on their success. These, together with the resolutions adopted by the numerous scientific organizations and letters written by prominent scientists, have been put in book form and will be presented to the Wrights.

The Wright brothers, after being entertained at luncheon by the Aero Club of Washington, proceeded to the White House. They were presented to the President by Representative Herbert Parsons of New York, who told of their great achievements. In presenting the medals, President Taft spoke briefly. More than 1,000 invitations had been sent out for the White House ceremony.

At its annual meeting last year the Aero Club of America, the pioneer aviation club in the United States, elected the Wrights to honorary membership and decided to award to each a gold medal. These were procured at a cost of $2,300, obtained through the subscriptions of its members. The medals bear the likenesses of the two brothers on one side and an inscription on the reverse side.

Wilbur and Orville Wright, accompanied by their sister, Miss Katherine Wright, were met at the station by a delegation from the Aero Club of America. The Wright brothers were taken to the Cosmos Club, where they were entertained.

NEW GATES STOP FLOOD AT SOO.

Lock Pumped Out to Determine Damage Done Recently.

The new gates on the lock of the Canadian ship canal at Sault Ste. Marie, replacing those which were wrecked recently by the steamer Perry G. Walker were hung in place the other night and the next day the great thousand foot lock was pumped out so that the amount of the damage done by the cataract that rushed through it after the accident might be determined. The steamer Crescent City which was carried through the lock by the swirling water after the Perry G. Walker had ripped out the lower gates, was raised and left for the lower lakes with temporary patches on her damaged bow.

CUPID POUTS AT HEALTH LAW.

Couples Go to Canada to Wed Because of New State Statute.

The new Washington State law providing that applicants for marriage licenses must undergo medical examination, except where the woman is 45 years old, went into effect the other day. Ten couples appeared at the license clerk's office in Seattle, with physician's certificates, and two couples, when informed of the new law, said they would go to British Columbia to marry. County officials say the law will result in many Americans marrying in Canada.

Work of Congress

Having completed consideration of items of the tariff bill that had been passed over under objections by Senators during its second reading the adjournment of the Senate Saturday marked an important period in the progress of the measure. When the bill is again taken up it will be upon its third reading for the final disposition of items upon which the most pronounced objections have been made. In completing the second reading of the bill, works of art, over twenty years old, and collections illustrating the progress of the arts over one hundred years old, which were placed in the free list by the committee on finance, were retained there after an interesting debate by a vote of 53 to 15. The starch industry received protection by a reversal of the recommendations made by the committee by which tapioca and sago flour will be subject to a duty of 1 cent a pound when not imported for food. Crude potash, potash carbonate, caustic potash and radium were placed upon the free list. The House was not in session.

-:—:-

Sugar was the stirring subject before the Senate Monday. It was brought to the front in connection with the consideration of the finance committee's substitute for the House provision of the tariff bill regulating the admission of Philippine articles into the United States. Mr. Bristow criticised the clause providing a duty on sugar admitted into the Philippines equal to that on sugar brought into the United States and exempting 300,000 tons of Philippine sugar from duty when brought into the United States. It was contended that the provisions were intended to promote the interests of the American sugar trust and not to benefit the Philippine producers. The supporters of the provision argued that to admit sugar into the islands free of duty would be to open the way for its free admission into this country. The only vote taken during the day session was on an amendment by Mr. Bristow admitting sugar into the Philippines free of duty. It was lost, 11 to 49. The Senate at 5:30 p. m. took a recess until 8 o'clock, when the discussion of the Philippine tariff was resumed. After a session of ten minutes the House adjourned until Thursday. Upon motion of Representative Murphy of Missouri, a resolution was passed, calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to forward the reports of Cyrus Bede, an Indian inspector, on the conduct in office of J. Blair Schoenfeldt, Indian agent at Union Station, Indian Territory, in 1904. Following the investigation by Bede, Schoenfeldt resigned, but the reports were never made public.

-:—:-

In the Senate Tuesday morning Senator Burkett of Nebraska vigorously denounced the finance committee for its change of front overnight on the subject of tobacco importations from the Philippines, which he declared looked like a game of petty politics directed against Senator La Follette, and declared it gave the Senate a good opportunity to vote lack of confidence in the committee. This denunciation was called out by Senator Aldrich's acceptance of Mr. Bulkeley's amendment to reduce the number of cigars from the Philippines to be admitted duty free from 150,000,000 to 70,000,000 and the quantity of filler tobacco from 1,500,000 to 1,000,000 pounds, with a provision that the wrapper and filler tobacco should be unstemmed. Mr. Aldrich in reply said there were men whose denunciation was the highest commendation. Senator La Follette proposed a further reduction in the free importation of cigars to 60,000,000 annually. This was defeated, 38 to 27. Senator Borah announced his intention of voting to give the Philippines an independent government. At 6 o'clock the Philippine amendment was laid aside and Mr. Aldrich presented the amendments to the silk schedule, which were adopted. The House was not in session.

John turned out the light, and while they waited for the elevator to come up for them Warry jingled the coins and keys in his pockets before he blurted:

"I say, John, I'm an underbred, low person, and am not worthy to be called thy friend, and you may hate me all you like, but one thing I'd like to know. Did she say anything about me when you passed us this afternoon—make any comment or anything? You know I despise myself for asking, but——"

Saxton laughed quietly.

"Yes, she did; but I don't know that I ought to tell you. It was really encouraging. She said, 'Miss Margrave has a lot of style; don't you think so?'"

"Is that all?" demanded Raridan, stepping into the car.

"That's all. It wasn't very much; but it was the way she said it; and as she said it she brushed a fly from the horse with the whip, and she did it very carefully."

In the corridor below they met Wheaton coming out of the side door of the bank. He had been at work, he said. Raridan asked him to go with them to the club for a game of billiards, but he pleaded weariness and said he was going to bed.

The three men walked up Varney street together. They were men of widely different antecedents and qualities. Circumstances, in themselves natural and harmless, had brought them together. The lives of all three were to be influenced by the weakness of one, and one woman's life was to be profoundly affected by contact with all of them. It is not ordained for us to know whether those we touch hands with, and even break bread with, from day to day, are to bring us good or evil. The electric light reveals nothing in the sibyl's book which was not disclosed of old to those who pondered the mysteries by starlight and rushlight.

Wheaton left them at the club door and went on to The Bachelors', which was only a step farther up the street.

"How do you like Wheaton by this time?" asked Raridan, as they entered the club.

"I hardly know how to answer that," Saxton answered. "He's treated me well enough. It seems to me I'm always trying to find some reason for not liking him, but I can't put my hand on anything tangible."

"That's the way I feel," said Raridan, hanging up his coat in the billiard room. "He's rigid, some way. There's no let-go in him. I guess the law allows us to dislike some people just on general principles, and Jim likes himself so well that you and I don't matter."

CHAPTER IX.

After the interim of quiet that Lent always brings in Clarkson, the spring came swiftly. There was a renewal of social activities which ran from dances and teas into outdoor gatherings. Evelyn had enjoyed to the full her experience at home. She had plunged into the frivolities of the town with a zest that was a trifle emphasized through her wish to escape any charge of being pedantic or literary. She was glad that she had gone to college, but she did not wish this fact of her life to be the haunting ghost of her days; and by the end of the winter she felt that she had pretty effectually laid it.

In June Mr. Porter began discussing summer plans with Evelyn. He eliminated himself from them; he could not get away, he said. But there was Grant to be considered. The boy was at school in New Hampshire, and Evelyn protested that it was not wise to subject him to the intense heat of a Clarkson summer. The first hot wave sent Porter to bed with a trifling illness, and his doctor took the opportunity to look him over and tell him that it was imperative for him to rest. Thompson came home from Arizona to spend the summer. He and Wheaton were certainly equal to the care of the bank, so they urged Porter, and he finally yielded. Evelyn found a hotel on the Massachusetts North Shore which sounded well in the circulars, and her father agreed to it. When they reached Orchard Lane he liked it better than he had expected. Every night he sat down with cipher telegrams, and constructed from Thompson's statistics the day's business in the bank. He received daily from New York the closing quotations on the shares he was interested in, and as he watched the long hotel verandas he effected a transmigration of spirit which put him back in his swivel chair in the Clarkson National.

In August Warry Raridan appeared suddenly and threw himself into the galeties of the place for a fortnight. Mr. Porter asked him to sit at their table and marveled at the way Evelyn snubbed him, even to the extent of running away for three days with some friends who had a yacht and who carried her to Newport for a dance. During her absence Warry made all the other girls about the place happy; they were sure that "that Miss Porter" was treating him shabbily and their hearts went out to him. Warry sulked when Evelyn returned and they had an interview between dances at a Saturday night hop.

He sought for recognition as a lover; she had not praised the efforts he had been making to win her approval by diligence at his office; he took care to call her attention to his changed habits.

"But, Evelyn, I am doing differently. I know that I wasted myself for years so that I'm a kind of joke and everybody laughs about me. But I want to know—I want to feel that I'm doing it for you! Don't you know that would help me and steady me? Won't you let it be for you?" He came close to her and stood with his arms folded, but she drew away from him with a despairing gesture.

"Oh, Warry," she cried, wearily, "you poor, foolish boy! Don't you know that you must do all things for yourself?"

"Yes," he returned eagerly. "I know that; I understand perfectly; but if you'd only let me feel that you wanted it——"

"I want you to succeed, but you will never do it for any one, if you don't do it for yourself."

He went home by an early train next morning to receive Saxton's consolation and to turn again to his law books. Margrave, on behalf of the Transcontinental, had offered to compromise the case of the poor widow whose clothes lines had been interfered with; but Raridan rejected this tender. He needed something on which to vent his mad spirits, and he gave his thought to devising means of transferring the widow's cause to the federal court. The removal of causes from State to federal courts was, Warry frequently said, one of the best things he did.

Porter's vacation was not altogether wasted. As he lounged about and philosophized to the Bostonians on Western business conditions, his restless mind took hold of a new project. It was suggested to him by the inquiries of a Boston banker, who owned a considerable amount of Clarkson Traction bonds and stock which he was anxious to sell. Porter gave a discouraging account of the company, whose history he knew thoroughly. The Traction Company had been organized in the boom days and its stock had been inflated in keeping with the prevailing spirit of the time. It was first equipped with the cable system in deference to the Clarkson hills, but later the company made the introduction of the trolley an excuse for a reorganization of its finances with an even more generous inflation. The panic then descended any wrought a diminution of revenue; the company was unable to make the repairs which constantly became necessary, and the local management fell into the hands of a series of corrupt directorates.

There had been much litigation, and some of the Eastern bondholders had threatened a receivership; but the local stockholders made plausible excuses for the default of interest when approached amicably, and when menaced grew insolent and promised trouble if an attempt were made to deprive them of power. A secretary and a treasurer under one administration had connived to appropriate a large share of the daily cash receipts, and before they left the office they destroyed or concealed the books and records of the company. The effect of this was to create a mystery as to the distribution of the bonds and the stock. When Porter came home from his summer vacation, the newspapers were demanding that steps be taken to declare the Traction franchise forfeit. But the franchise had been renewed lately and had twenty years to run. This extension had been procured by the element in control, and the foreign bondholders, biding their time, were glad to avail themselves of the political skill of the local officers.

Porter had been casually asked by his Boston friend whether there was any local market for the stock or bonds; and he had answered that there was not; that the holders of shares in Clarkson kept what they had because they could no longer sell to one another and that they were only waiting for the larger outside bondholders and shareholders to assert themselves. Porter had ridden down to Boston with his brother banker and when they parted it was with an understanding that the Bostonian was to collect for Porter the Clarkson Traction securities that were held by New England banks, a considerable amount, Porter knew; and he went home with a well-formed plan of buying the control of the company. Times were improving and he had faith in Clarkson's future; he did not believe in it so noisily as Timothy Margrave did; but he knew the resources of the tributary country, and he had, what all successful business men must have, an alert imagination.

It was not necessary for Porter to disclose the fact of his purchases to the officers of the Traction Company, whom he knew to be corrupt and vicious; the transfer of ownership on the company's books made no difference, as the original stock books had been destroyed—a fact which had become public property through a legal effort to levy on the holdings of a shareholder in the interest of a creditor. Moreover, if he could help it, Porter never told any one about anything he did. He even had several dummies in whose names he frequently held securities and real estate. One of these was Peckham, a clerk in the office of Fenton, Porter's lawyer.

CHAPTER X.

Wheaton had not long been an officer of the bank before he began to be aware that there was considerable mystery about Porter's outside transactions. Porter occasionally perused with much interest several small memorandum books which he kept carefully locked in his desk. The president often wrote letters with his own hand and copied them himself after bank hours, in a private letter-book. Wheaton was naturally curious as to what these outside interests might be. It had piqued him to find that while he was cashier of the band he was not consulted in its larger transactions; and that of Porter's personal affairs he knew nothing.

One afternoon shortly after Porter's return from the East, Wheaton, who was waiting for some letters to sign, picked up a bundle of checks from the desk of one of the individual bookkeepers. They were Porter's personal checks which had that day been paid and were now being charged to his private account. Wheaton turned them over mechanically; it was not very long since he had been an individual bookkeeper himself; he had entered innumerable checks bearing Porter's name without giving them a thought. As the slips of paper passed through his fingers, he accounted for them in one way or another and put them back on the desk, face down, as a man always does who has been trained as a bank clerk. The last of them he held and studied. It was a check made payable to Peckham, Fenton's clerk. The amount was $9,999.00—too large to be accounted for as a payment for services; for Peckham was an elderly failure at the law who ran errands to the courts for Fenton and sometimes took charge of small collection matters for the bank.

A few days later, in the course of business, he asked Porter what disposition he should make of an application for a loan from a country customer. Porter rang for the past correspondence with their client, and threw several letters to Wheaton for his information. Wheaton read them and called the stenographer to dictate the answer which Porter had indicated should be made. He held the client's last letter in his hand, and in concluding turned it over into the wire basket which stood on his desk. As it fell face downwards his eye caught some figures on the back, and he picked it up thinking that they might relate to the letter. The memorandum was in Porter's large, uneven hand and read:

33

909
909

The result of the multiplication was identical with the amount of Peckham's check. Again the figures held his attention. Local securities were quoted daily in the newspapers, and he examined the list for that day. There was no quotation of thirty-three on anything; the nearest approach was Clarkson Traction Company at thirty-five. The check which had interested him had been dated three days before, and he looked back to the quotation list for that date. Traction was given at thirty-three. Wheaton was pleased by the discovery; it was a fair assumption that Porter was buying shares of Clarkson Traction; he would hardly be buying foreign securities through Peckham. The stock had advanced two points since it had been purchased, and this, too, was interesting. Clearly, Porter knew what he was about—he had a reputation for knowing; and if Clarkson Traction was a good thing for the president to pick up quietly, why was it not a good thing for the cashier? He waited a day; Traction went to thirty-six. Then he called after banking hours at the office of a real estate dealer who also dealt in local stocks and bonds on a small scale. He chose this man because he was not a customer of the bank, and had never had any transactions with the bank or with Porter, so far as Wheaton knew. His name was Burton, and he welcomed Wheaton cordially. He was alone in his office, and after an interchange of courtesies, Wheaton came directly to the point of his errand.

"Some friends of mine in the country own a small amount of Traction stock; they've written me to find out what its prospects are. Of course in the bank we know in a general way about it, but I suppose you handle such things and I want to get good advice for my friends."

"Well, the truth is," said Burton, flattered by this appeal, "the bottom was pretty well gone out of it, but it's sprucing up a little just now. If the charter's knocked out it is only worth so much a pound as old paper; but if the right people get hold of it the newspapers will let up, and there's a big thing in it. How much do your friends own?"

"I don't know exactly," said Wheaton, evenly; "I think not a great deal. Who are buying just now? I notice that it has been advancing for several days. Some one seems to be forcing up the price."

"Nobody in particular, that is, nobody that I know of. I asked Billy Barnes, the secretary, the other day what was going on. He must know who the certificates are made out to; but he winked and gave me the laugh. You know Barnes. He don't cough up very easy; and he looks wise when he doesn't know anything."

"No; Barnes has the reputation of being pretty close-mouthed," replied Wheaton.

"If your friends want to sell, bring in the shares and I'll see what I can do with them," said Burton. "The outsiders are sure to act soon. This spurt right now may have nothing back of it. The town's full of gossip about the company and it ought to send the price down. Your friend Porter's a smooth one. He was in once, a long time ago, but he knew when to get out all right." Wheaton laughed with Burton at this tribute to Porter's sagacity, but he laughed discreetly. He did not forget that he was a bank officer and dignity was an essential in the business, as he understood it.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

CHICAGO.

Further evidences of the improving state of business generally are seen in a lower record of failures and a new high five-day exhibit of heavy payments through the banks. The official report and other advices indicate that the crops make seasonable progress, the growing condition being entirely favorable. Unsettled weather here retarded full activity in the leading retail lines, but considerable demand developed in the wholesale branches of general merchandise and shipments by dry goods houses were larger than usual at this period. Transportation of freight and passengers show expansion. There is a notably increased marketing and outgo of grain, and heavier movements occur in finished products of the mills and factories and in lumber, wool and building materials.

Improved demands strengthen the conditions in iron and steel, and this causes more drawing upon capacity of furnaces, forges, foundries and car shops. Railroad needs come forward quite freely now and are of more variety and extent than recently noted. The effect stimulates preparations for extended enterprise in manufacturing and more hands find re-employment. Numerous bookings strengthen operations in pig iron, rails, equipment, brass working and furniture. Heavy consumers find the cost of supplies rising, and this induces wider buying to protect future requirements. The markets for raw materials are amply stocked, except hides, which decreased in variety and have firmer prices for the better qualities. Industrial prospects would be brighter with an early settlement of tariff revision, but much encouragement is derived from the excellent outlook in agriculture, values of the principal farm products assuring an accession of wealth to advance manufactures and distribution.

Bank clearings aggregate $275,108,417 for five days and exceed those for six days a year ago by 27.6 per cent. The total for the corresponding week in 1907 was $246,844,613.

Failures reported in the Chicago district number 21, against 25 last week, 21 in 1908 and 14 in 1907. Those with liabilities over $5,000 number 4 against 6 last week, 8 in 1908 and 7 in 1907.—Dun's Review of Trade.

NEW YORK.

Reports from leading industries are on the whole, favorable, so far as booking of future orders is concerned. Iron and steel are active in finished lines, though output is still below normal in some districts. Some wage advances are reported and resumptions of blast furnaces are reducing the floating labor supply. There is reported a widening demand for cotton goods; print cloths have regained the loss of a few weeks ago; woolen goods trade reports are of good business booked or pending, and wool, though less active than of late, is still very strong at high-level prices. The leather trade is active, with high prices ruling in sympathy with hides and skins, which are apparently scarce. Eastern shoe orders are fair. Shipments are 24 per cent larger than a year ago, but smaller than in any previous year back to 1902. Building trade reports confirm earlier predictions of a record spring construction in an enormous total far surpassing all previous monthly records ever compiled.

Business failure for the week ending with June 10 in the United States were 197, against 191 last week, 253 in the like week of 1908, 161 in 1907, 170 in 1906 and 175 in 1905. Failures in Canada for the week number 22, which compares with 29 last week and 24 in the like week of 1908.—Bradstreet's.

100 DIE IN BIG QUAKE.

Southern France Feels Shock and Damage Will Amount to Millions.

At least 100 dead, with every possibility of the death list growing much larger, and 100 hurt is the result of the sharp earthquake which devastated several towns and villages in the southernmost part of France, particularly in the departments of Herault and Bouches-du-Rhone.

Great suffering is reported from the remoter places, owing to a lack of bread and the necessaries of life, before the arrival of assistance. The casualties may be greatly increased, as the ruins have not yet been entirely searched. The villages of St. Canat and Rognes were completely demolished by the earthquake, and Lambesc, which is twelve miles from Aix, suffered heavily. Survivors are sleeping in tents, and the streets are impassable. In many places they have been torn up and are incumbered with masses of rocks. Houses, public buildings and churches were crumbled to pieces. Among other villages seriously damaged are Vauvenargues, Venelles, Pelissanne, Puy-Ste-Reparade and Arguilles.

The victims at St. Cannat and Rognez were horribly mutilated. There were evidences that several of the victims had lived for hours imprisoned by the debris before they died. The people rushed into the streets when the first shock occurred, crying out in terror. Many of them returned to the rescue of their families. At Rognez a family of four was buried in the ruins. Their cries could be heard throughout the night, but all were dead in the morning when a rescuing party reached them. At St. Cannat an old man and his son were watching a billiard game. They were instantly killed. The players escaped with slight bruises. The chateau Valmousse, near St. Cannat, was badly damaged. The communal chateau at Arguilles was split in two. The historic village of Vernegues was wrecked, but no one was killed. The monetary loss in the affected district is very heavy.

ARSENIC IS FOUND IN BREAD.

Rich Indiana Woman Thinks Poison That Killed Farmer Was for Her.

The presence of arsenic in the bread sample sent to the food and drug laboratory of the State Board of Health by former Congressman John C. Cheney of Sullivan, Ind., has been established by a test just completed, and on the strength of the discovery preparations are being made to investigate the cause of the recent death of Spencer Spriggs, living in Haddon Township, Sullivan County. In addition to the bread samples, a sample of flour was sent to the laboratory, but this has not yet been tested. Spriggs and Sam and Howard Whitfield are said to have been poisoned May 24, the symptoms being ptomaine poisoning. The two Whitfields recovered, but Spriggs died.

Mrs. Flora Haddon believes the poison was placed in the bread in order to cause her death. Spriggs lived on her farm. Mrs. Haddon had told of receiving three anonymous letters recently on which were pictured a skull and crossbones, telling her to leave or she would be killed. Mrs. Haddon was recently defendant in a suit brought by Frank Crawford, postmaster in the Hawaiian islands, involving land valued at $200,000. The jury decided in her favor.

WANT TO EXPEL PROF. FOSTER.

Baptist Ministers Say Educator's Views Proclaim Him Unitarian.

The efforts of the Chicago Baptist ministers to expel Prof. George Burnam Foster from the church and if possible from the faculty of Chicago University have stirred up the biggest row the church there has seen in many years. The ministers declare that Dr. Foster's views, as laid down in his latest book, "The Function of Religion in Man's Struggle for Existence," proclaim him no longer a Baptist. They say he is a Unitarian and has insulted his fellow clergymen. Foster refuses to resign and asserts he is a "Typical old-fashioned Baptist, of the kind that fought, bled and died for human freedom.

Dr. Foster's 17-year-old son George has added humor to the serious situation by his action when he defended his father on "constitutional grounds." He demanded that the ministers "review the book, not the man," saying it was against the constitution of this government to restrict a man's thoughts.

GIRL SHOT BY THIEF SHE WED.

Married Youth to Reform Him, Then Flees Because of His Cruelty.

"Now I've got you," shouted Andrew Deck, as he sprang from behind a door and fired three shots at his young wife in Cincinnati. One bullet passed through her chest and another penetrated her right arm. She was removed to the city hospital, where the doctors said her condition was critical. Deck is at large. Deck and his wife are each 20 years old. Deck had been a thief. Rose Shuck had known him since childhood. He was sent to the reformatory at Mansfield, Ohio, and she worked for his pardon, and two years ago secured it, and met him at the door of the reformatory and they were married. The case at the time attracted attention, as she married him to reform him. A few days ago the young wife, with her baby, fled from home on account of the husband's cruelty.

The railroads of the country have spent $30,000,000 since January 1, for new car equipment.

In view of recent achievements in Venezuela and the benevolent interest of the United States therein, this would seem to be hardly the time for anyone in this country to organize or assist a filibustering expedition against that country.

Not the least gratifying feature of the news from Washington that Senator Aldrich and his associates in the upper house of Congress have agreed to add to the tariff bill the Taft proposition for a tax on the net earnings of corporations, is the fact that this constitutes a serious blow to the Aldrich leadership in the senate. Mr. Aldrich and his associates have not, it is true, yielded to the demand of the so-called Republican "insurgents" but the proud leader found it necessary to go to the White House and confess his inability unaided to defeat the income tax. President Taft immediately perceived his advantage and pointed out the advisability of using the corporation tax to defeat the income tax and Aldrich realized the necessity of accepting the proposition.

If reports from Washington are correct, Secretary Nagel expects to revolutionize the Department of Commerce and Labor. He has shown already, a decided tendency to know all about the things for which he is responsible as an officer of the government, and he has now set in motion the machinery for a thorough investigation of every bureau in his department. The resignation of Mr. North as Director of the Census is evidence of the fact that political influence will avail nothing where incompetency is proven, and those clerks, if there be such, who are more interested in watching the clock than in the conscientious performance of their duties had better take heed while they may. Mr. Nagel's plan to inforce efficiency and economy in the department under his control is consonant with the policy of the present administration and expressed by Mr. Taft to his Cabinet almost immediately following his inauguration.

Announcement is just made of another concession to the views of the President by the Senate leaders in agreement to waive the time limit which they had determined to attach to Mr. Taft's proposition of a two per cent tax on the net earnings of corporations. Evidently the members of the senate are beginning to appreciate that they have in the White House a politician of more than ordinary ability. He has already demonstrated a skill in the game of economic politics of no mean order in the masterly ability with which he has handled the tariff legislation. While giving no encouragement to the "insurgents," Mr. Taft has placed no obstacle in their way; avoiding any criticism of the press that he was exceeding his constitutional prerogatives, his attitude has encouraged the press to criticise the senate tariff bill as producing too little revenue; and finally, biding his time, the President has waited until the senate leaders were obliged to go to him for assistance to defeat the income tax, when he adroitly guides them into a position where their only recourse is to enact a substitute which is but a degree less objectionable to many of them than the Commins-Bailey proposition. Whether President Taft will play an equally skillful game in obtaining the enactment of other measures for which he is understood to stand remains to be seen.

Lima, Ind., No More

The Post Office Department last week changed the name of the office at Lima, Ind., to "Howe" after the name of the Howe Military Academy, and President Taft sent the name of James E. Zook to the senate for postmaster at Howe, Ind. The town of Lima, LaGrange county, has occupied a place on the map for a great many years and there are at least a few who regret to have the name dropped. John B. Howe a pioneer of LaGrange county made his large fortune in business at Lima as did Mr. Samuel P. Williams, banker. Mr. Howe gave of his fortune to establish the Military school and it has become an institution of wide renown. There are very few towns of the size of Lima with so large a tax duplicate and the public improvements have all been made without contracting any indebtedness It is claimed that mail for Lima, Ind., often went to Lima, Ohio and this was used as an inducement to change the name.

Birth of Music.

By the old Romans the god Mercury was credited with the invention of music. According to Apallodorus, the belief was as follows: The Nile, after an overflow, left on the shore a dead tortoise. It's flesh was finally dried up by the hot sun, so that nothing remained in the shell but the cartilages, which, being braced and contracted by the heat, became sonorous. Mercury, happening to be walking that way, and striking his foot against the shell, was so pleased with the sound produced that the idea of a lyre presented itself to his imagination. He immediately constructed the instrument in the form of a tortoise, and strung it with the sinews of dead animals. And so music began.—New York American.

DUELING IS ANCIENT CUSTOM

Had Its Origin in the Judicial Combat and Found Favor with All Nations.

Dueling in the proper sense of the word was handed down from the early Germans, Danes and Franks, all of whom carried the practice of the judicial combat to such an extreme that only women, sick persons, cripples and men more than 60 years old were exempt from it. The judicial combat was especially authorized by Gundebald, king of the Burgundians, as early at 501 A. D.

Finally the practice of dueling was carried into France, where it soon became so common that it is estimated that 6,000 persons fell in mortal combat in the ten years of the reign of Henry IV.

Single combats are said to have been introduced in England by the Normans. During the period of chivalry in that country they were in common practice, but in the strict interpretation of the word they could not be called duels. In the literal sense of the word, the duel was introduced in England about the time that the practice became prevalent in France.

Dueling began in this country in the early days of its settlement. In fact, the code of honor was brought to the new world by the first settlers. The first encounter of this kind took place at Plymouth, Mass., in 1621, two of the settlers deciding a question of honor with the heavy swords that were carried in those days.

Our Four Mile Saloon

(Special to The News.)

Spencerville, Ind., June 23.—Our four mile saloon which has been in existance for nearly six months has been doing fine business and we as Spencerville pesple should not let our respect and patriotism for this our God sent institution grow cold but we should see that this saloon as well as all saloons prosper in the future. In fact it is, "America's Rock of Gibralter." It is a fact however that we have a goodly number of cranks who would glory in seeing the total destruction of the saloon and for this reason, chartered members, we the Independent and Ancient Order of Anti-Pail Association do hereby give a few reasons why the saloon should exist and grow:

The men, women and children, young men and women are wholly in favor of the saloon and are even playing for its retainment. We recognize that the home would be miserable and desolute without this resuscitating juice, divorce cases would be novelties if more of it was only used domestic troubles would be the thing of the past, flat irons, rolling pins and potato stompers would have a rest from the meteoric trips through the house and the head of the bald headed husband would again show signs of a crop of hair. Men would be more able to transact their public and domestic affairs better, friendship would run at a higher ebb and the crooked toe paths would become straight. To prove our above statement we bring forth the following existing truths.

Since the establishment of our "Down the Way Saloon," there has been no midnight disturbances in town as St. Joe and Concord can also truly say. Parents have been setting the true and correct examples before their children by allowing them to gather up empty bottles and take them to saloons to market of which offers excellent opportunities for them to get in close touch with the drinking habit. Young men are showing their wisdom and good common sense by using it early in life thus enlarging their possibilities of future success and shortening the way to the hard fought for title. "A Sport," and the young lady who does not encourage the young man in the use of alcoholic drinks by her company and virtues is missing her calling in this life.

The great success of our churches is wholly due to the saloon every where and the church should cease to wage war on this blessing of humanity. When we have won all America on the wet side we will pull down the Statue of Liberty and mount in its place the scene of a huge beer keg with its products, "A happy home." We will then close the asylums, jails, poor houses and reformitories and erect in their places more saloons.

To sum up then if we do not hold up this institution we will soon be on the list of fallen nations. Oh! what a lie.

Obituary.

Harriet Josephine Roller, wife of Franklin P. Boger, was born in Mahoning Co., Ohio, May 2, 1857. Her parents were James R. and Mary J. Roller, with whom in her early childhood she came to Springfield, Tp., Allen Co., Indiana, where in the midst of the wilderness they made their home which still remains in possession of members of the family. She was of a family of nine children; eight sisters and one brother. Three sisters died in early life. Her mother also died leaving a family of little ones.

Hattie then 8 years old was cared for by James Henderson, of west of Spencerville, in whose family she remained until maturity. She was always of a religious turn of mind and united with the Lutheran church at Spencerville when about 13 years of age under the pastoral direction of Rev. E. W. Erick. Her membership was afterward transfered to the Salem congregation of the Springfield charge. She married Franklin T. Boger, February 23, 1882. They made then their home where they have since lived with the exception of one year spent in the west.

Six children came to bless their union, five girls and one boy, four of these died in infancy. Mrs. Boger leaves a husband, two daughters, Mrs. Estie Rhoads and Miss Bernice Boger, one grandchild, a fosterson, four sisters and one brother.

Mrs. Boger was never of rugged health, but always endured her weaknesses patiently. About four years ago she was seriously ill. At that time her attending physician said something about symptoms of a trouble that has of late caused her death.

She passed from this life June 12, 1909. Aged 52 years 1 month and 10 days. The funeral was conducted from the Lutheran Church at Spencerville by her pastor, Rev. M. R. Mohler. Rev. E. W. Erick took a prominent part in the service. Henry Beams funeral director.

There are promotions in life, which, independent of the more substantial rewards they offer, acquire peculiar value and dignity from the coats and waistcoats connected with them. A field marshal has his uniform; a bishop his silk apron; a counsellor his silk gown; a beadle his cocked hat. Strip the bishop of his apron, or the beadle of his hat and lace, what are they? Men, mere men. Dignity, and even holiness, too, sometimes, are more questions of coat and waistcoat than some people imagine.—Charles Dickens.

Women Who Are Envied.

Those attractive women who are lovely in face, form and temper are the envy of many, who might be like them. RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION.

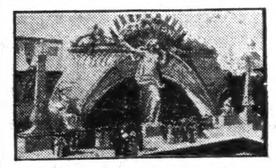
Chicago's Greatest Amusement Enterprise Completed at a Cost of $5,000,000.

None of Chicago's other marvelous achievements equal the great amusement enterprise it has just launched, RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION.

This exposition surpasses everything of its character since the original World's Fair. Five million dollars was expended to make it a crowning gem in Chicago's coronet of beautiful parks. Last season 7,600,000 persons visited the exposition. This year it will accommodate 10,000,000. A trip to Chicago would be incomplete without a visit there.

RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION surpasses Caesar's ancient Circus Maximus where 5,000 dancers entertained Rome. Five thousand dancers could be lost in any one of its courts, esplanades, causeways or wooded groves. That many show girls, trick riders, Indians and cowboys are used in its "Frontier Day Fetes" alone.

Twice as many are accommodated in the amphitheater, where Mexican bull fights occur. Wild bulls and daring Toreadors daily enact thrilling contests for life and death. A Spanish band of 100 pieces discourses national music. Many military bands render open air concerts. The industrial exhibit includes wireless telegraphy, flying machines, dirigible balloons, aeroplanes and other mechanical marvels.



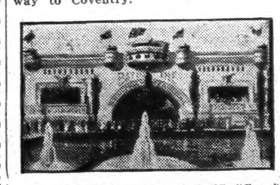
RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION'S matchless attraction is "The Creation." This stupendous scenic spectacle, animated by Biblical characters of the Garden of Eden, is destined to attract world-wide attention. It is the product of the genius of E. W. McConnell, builder of several world's fairs, and his staff of a hundred artists.

The scene is the Valley of the Euphrates, where tradition locates Eden. Awed spectators view as near to its reproduction as man may conceive. The great religious drama closely follows the Scripture.

"There is first a void, then darkness, dawn and light; separation of the sky, the earth and the waters; the beginning of life in the air and the waters, birds and fishes, creeping and crawling things, celestial anthems of unseen spirit bands; the creation of Adam and Eve, their temptation, transgression and expulsion by Angel Gabriel, who drives them forth with a flaming sword."

A great $25,000 pipe organ intones appropriate music. Its deep tubes produce thunder, and its flute-like notes the mimicry of forest small life. Flashes of lightning and angry storms are made by electrical and water effects. Space forbids an adequate description of this magnificent spectacle.

Another great novelty is "The Races," an English panorama. Fifty horses attached to chaises race over the highway to Coventry.



RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION'S "Court of Honor" has never been equaled since the Ancient Hanging Gardens of Babylon. Its center is a lagoon of crystal water, through which flash myriads of silver and gold fish. The limpid edges are fringed with emerald lawn set in rows of stately Lombardy poplars. Cascade fountains play prismatic sprays high overhead and cooling mists float downward into the lagoon. Fantastic facades and white pavilions gleam through the trees as a marble setting for the beautiful landscape.

"Over Niagara Falls" reproduces on a mammoth scale the famous waterfalls.

The inspiring strands of great bands, softer tones of orchestras, sounds of merriment from joyous throngs, sunlit waters and forestry, gay show-places, the whirr of aerial cars and flying machines, whistles of miniature railroads, vocalization of the animals of "Circle D Ranch," chanting Indians, the familiar "rooting" enthusiasts in the baseball park, the silent onward movement of the river that courses through the great park, and millions of activities that impart pleasure, mystery and delight, make RIVERVIEW EXPOSITION a place of magic, the like of which the world has never seen.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

THE UNNECESSARY BURDEN.

By Rev. C. A. S. Dwight.

"For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no other greater burden than these necessary things."—Acts 15: 28.

It is recorded in the Book of Acts that the apostles and elders in Jerusalem, in a certain crisis in church history, wrote a circular letter to the brethren at Antioch, and to those in Syria and Clicia, outlining for their information the fundamental principles and essential duties of the Christian faith, and containing this significant statement: "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no other greater burden than these necessary things." In this declaration of the wise leaders of the church at Jerusalem there is contained the idea of a discrimination between essentials and non-essentials in Christian precept and practice—a distinction which has ever since commended itself to the enlightened intelligence and conscience of thoughtful Christians. The yoke which Jesus Christ imposes is by His own definition of it light. The commandments which God Himself gives are "not grievous." But when silly Galatians are bewitched by heretical teachers, or carnal Laodiceans depart from the simplicity of the Gospel to serve idols of gold and silver, and to court the favor of the world, the burden of life quickly becomes heavier, and its difficulties are multiplied.

In every century Satan and his agents have been busy inventing unnecessary burdens for the backs of fallible Christians. When the devil cannot tempt a good man outright into sin he does what from his standpoint is the next best thing—makes him foolish or fanatical, and so loads him down with distracting doubts or imaginary duties as practically to paralyze his power for good in human society. For the over-burdened man cannot in the fullest degree be the efficient man. The soldier cannot fight at his best when overweighted with knapsack and blanket. So the Christian foeman must proceed to the fray in light marching order, laying aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset him, if he is to do his best work as a spiritual combatant.

The unnecessary burden takes many forms. Sin itself is the first illustration that suggests itself of this kind of needless burdening. God does not mean that any repenting man should struggle along under the load of unforgiven sin. Rather, the glad testimony of every child of God should be, "At the Cross the burden of my sin has rolled away!" The straight gate is too narrow to allow of a heavenbound pilgrim's carrying through it a great pack of unforgiven iniquity, nor can even the sin of yesterday be borne as a load through to-day. The pilgrim must confess and forsake each day's sin, and so be delivered from its drag, as he goes along.

Legalism is a burden which from the days of the apostles has been imposed upon many unnecessarily. The Galatians of old were caught in yoke. To them the Jewish law became a kind of relentlessly persecuting Pharaoh pursuing them even as they sought to reach the Christian Canaan. They were still, though professed Christians, entangled in the mesh of rites and rules and rabbinic refinements of a man-made tradition. To them circumcision was more than Christ, and a single letter in one word of the Law as weighty as the whole Sermon on the Mount. From this enslavement to legalism even an apostle Paul with difficulty delivered the "foolish Galatians."

Many people through lack of faith carry an unnecessary burden of care and worry. There is no right-minded man who is or would wish to be wholly careless in this necessitous world, but many of the cares which people assume (and seek to transport about with them like so much extra baggage) are artificial, that is, they are not caused by the very nature of things but arise from the worrying tempers of the people in question. God means that all men should work but that none should worry. The real and inescapable burdens of life are heavy enough without laying upon one's own shoulders or on those of others needless burdens of anxiety and distress of mind which a little more faith, and a closer walk with God, would dispel as the rising of the sun scatters the brooding mists of the morning.

Consider whether in your life you are not carrying some unnecessary burdens which neither the Lord nor His apostles ever meant to lay upon you. The essentials of Christianity are important and imposing enough to keep everybody sufficiently busy and occupied who concerns himself with them without superadding upon that load of admitted responsibility a variety of little weights and appendages which fritter away the strength of the Christian and perhaps eventually, by weighing down his endurance to the breaking point, involve him in positive sin. The apostle Paul—what a wise, practical man Paul was!—once expressed a concern lest some of his contemporaries should be swallowed up of overmuch sorrow. There are people who in these days are in danger of being swallowed up of overmuch care—who are rapidly becoming the slaves either of wearying worry or of equally wearying pleasure-seeking. It is this "overmuch" of desire or doing that creates a condition of moral danger for the Christian. Do then the necessary duty, but decline the unnecessary burden. Be all that God wants you to be, but do not essay the thankless task of trying to be too many things besides.

THE BLESSED FOOLS.

By Henry F. Cope.

"The walk by faith."—II. Cor. 5:7.

The fools save the world; the practically minded and the worldly wise simply keep it going. The wise, who never go forth without a two foot rule in hand, first laugh at the fools, then pity them, then imprison and kill them. Thed did that to Jesus and to Galileo, and to every other one who talked of a kingdom that could not be laid off with their measuring sticks.

Probably to a horse a man is the greatest fool imaginable; he rushes around, he does so many things that seem to have no significance; he wears himself all out and often gets neither oats nor a stall at the end of the day. The man works for ends that are before him, invisible often; the horse works only on the spur of that which is behind him. The man is a mere idealist; the horse a practical economist.

Almost any person can see the meaning of a brick wall; only a few get the significance of a symphony, yet the one is as real as the other, and the truth is this plain old world of ours is molded a good deal more by the things that touch the soul than by those that sink deeper than the senses.

The philosophy that sees all life only as so much animated mud misses the richer and mightier meanings of life. To see only things is really not to see anything. It is as if one should think of a book as only so many type impressions or of a song as only so many black dots on paper. Life lies deeper than its outer forms and consists of more than meat and drink and flesh and blood.

Yet through all our money making, our getting and our spending, our mad rushing to and fro, the toil and turmoil of our world runs a fine strain of great motives and ideals. It manifests itself in love of truth, devotion to great purposes, tenderness and regard for the weak, succor for the needy, sympathy for the sad; in truth and goodness and helpfulness it is seen, and the name of this spirit is religion.

Churches are only organized, social forms of its expression; creeds are only attempts to analyze its phenomena; meetings, services, and preaching are only more or less formalized methods of stimulating men to its ideals; back of them all lies this vision of great principles, great purposes in living, this that makes some count not their lives dear to themselves makes many set first those principles and ideals in their lives.

We are all idealists—we all live for the things not seen. We pretend to be much more materialistic than we are. But deep within ourselves we know that life cannot be sustained by bread alone, and that it consists in more than abundance of things. And so we live for the love of a friend or for the hope of a better world.

The unworthiness of our lives is often due to our lack of confidence in the essential worthiness of all life; we are not quite sure whether this is a right world; often we have more faith in the evil that asserts itself in selfishness and every form of iniquity than in the good that beckons from on high. We yield to the instinct to save ourselves because we are not certain that infinite goodness will care for those who follow the right.

We will do right when the way is clearly mapped out in express directions. But faith is the power to do the right when the way is as yet uncharted, to believe that there is no other way for worthy souls, to believe that it is wiser losing all for the right than gaining the whole earth and losing one's real self.

We need to believe in the better day that is to be, to have faith to fit ourselves for it, and to push out into it. We need faith to overcome the mountains in its way, to stir the sluggish hearts of men who cling to old selfishness and to change the minds that lie dormant in prejudices. This is the faith that regenerates and saves.

Men are not saved by believing this fact or the other incident in history: they are saved by the faith that makes history, the faith that forms the future, that looks back only to be inspired to push forward, by the faith that leads them to follow truth wherever it may lead. Doing this they find they are walking with all the faithful, they are treading the way that has led to every Calvary and to every new and eternal life.

Don'ts for Churchmen.

Don't forget that self-pity is downright selfishness.

Don't expect blessing from any bread until it is broken and shared.

Don't expect the Lord to hear you if you pray with iniquity in your heart.

Don't expect man to rest on the gospel of peace if handed to him on a pitchfork.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that because you do nothing you do no wrong.

Don't forget that the true man fears the power of sin more than its punishment.

Bill—And has their wealth improved them?

Jill—No; they bought a piano with part of it.—Yonkers Statesman.

The Pity of It.

Josh—It's too bad.

Bosh—What's too bad?

Josh—That our neighbors always know when we have fried onions for supper, but never get next when we have strawberries and ice cream.

Now He's Sorry He Asked.

Mr. Newwed—What would you do, dearest, if I should die?

Mrs. Newwed (sadly)—I hate to think of it, darling. I should be grief-stricken—until some good, big, affectionate fellow like you should come along.

Absent All Around.

The absent-minded professor returned home one evening, and, after ringing his front door-bell for some time to no effect, heard the maid's voice from the second-story window:

"The professor is not in."

"All right," quietly answered the professor; "I'll call again." And he hobbled down the stone steps.—Lippincott's.

Sure to Take Notice.

Gunner—What do you think of the proposition to signal Mars with mirrors?

Guyer—I'm not sure about Mars, but I bet Venus would take notice.

Gunner—Why so?

Guyer—Because Venus is the feminine planet, you know.

He Was Fortunate.

Meeker—My wife walked all over my collar this morning.

Bleeker—that's too bad. You have my sympathy, old man.

Meeker—Oh, it might have been worse. Fortunately I didn't have the collar on at the time.

Better Still.

"You can't make a man a gentleman by calling him one," said the moralizer.

"True," rejoined the thoughtful thinker, "but nine times out of a possible ten you can please him and thereby carry your point, and that is more to the purpose."

The Way of Hope.

He (desperately)—Tell me the truth. Is it not my poverty that stands between us?

She (sadly)—Y-e-s.

He (with a ray of hope)—I admit that I am poor, and so, unfortunately, is my father; but I have an aged uncle who is very rich, and a bachelor. He is an invalid and cannot long survive.

She (delightedly)—How kind and thoughtful you are! Will you introduce me to him?—New York Weekly.

"Devilish."

"Hello!" cried Cheeriman, "how are you, old man?"

"Don't 'old man' me," snapped Groucher, who was becoming touchy about his age. "I don't look like an old man, do I?"

"Well, no; just at this minute you look more like the 'Old Boy.'"—Catholic Standard and Times.

A Cruel Thirst.

Landlady—Why, Mr. Boarder, you are putting butter in your coffee!

Mr. Boarder—Yes! I have always been taught that the strong should help the weak.

Called Down.

"Why are you so vexed?"

"I attended the meeting of the Social Equality League, and my cook presided and had the audacity to call me to order three times!"

Dodging Responsibility.

"Why should a man pay rent when he can own his own home?" asid the thrifty citizen.

"I don't know," answered Mr. Meekton, "unless it's because you'd rather have your wife speak her mind to the landlord than to you when the place gets run down."—Washington Star.

No Wonder.

"He's smart enough, but he doesn't seem to make money."

"Maybe he's honest."

"What Think Ye?"

She—What do you think of Mabel?

He—Well, I think she's a nice girl—awfully well-meaning and all that sore of thing.

She—I don't like her, either."—Columbia Jester.

Imagination.

"Don't you think that writer has a remarkable imagination?"

"He has," answered Miss Cayenne, "if he imagines that many people are going to read what he publishes."—Washington Star.

Refined Talk.

"I think she has a very refined face."

"Well, it's been through processes enough."

His Profession.

Max—You say he is beating his way about the country.

Dax—Yes; he plays the drum with the band in a traveling circus.

Bad Guesser.

Chief of Weather Bureau—Why do you think you'd make a good weather clerk?

Applicant—Well, in a bean-guessing contest once I guessed there were 620 beans in the jar and there were 10,672.

Unintentional.

Percy—Why, Kitty, how fast you walk! I have been trying to overtake you for three blocks.

Kitty—I wasn't hurrying especially, Percy. I didn't know that you were coming.

Not Necessary.

Johnson—Are you one of those mean-spirited men who ask their wives what they do with the money they receive?

Woodson—Certainly not; I don't have to ask my wife. She plays bridge whist.

LITERARY LITTLE BITS

The imaginativeness of Jules Verne received a curious tribute at Amiens the other day. A monument was unveiled to him, and speeches were made, but the attraction of the event was the exhibition of aeroplane air ship models and the ascent of four Aero Club balloons.

Hall Caine is now hard at work revising his new story, "The White Prophet," which appeared in the Strand Magazine. The book deals with the Arab tradition that in the end of time a Redeemer will come to unite the faiths of the world into one faith and the peoples of the world into one people.

Lottie Blair Parker, author of the plays "Way Down East," and "Under Southern Skies," has turned her hand to fiction. Henry Holt & Co. will issue her novel entitled "Homespun." It is a humorous story of New England village life showing the same sort of characters and plot development that gave the author's plays such wide appeal.

A recent newspaper paragraph points out that what might be called a European "edition" of the American Literary Digest is published by the German emperor himself. It is called "A Daily Record of International Opinion." Unlike the American Literary Digest, the circulation of the German emperor's organ is limited to exactly two copies, one of which is placed in the hands of the emperor and the other goes to the National Library.

Now that the ruler of Turkey is being generally named in conversation, a gentleman from Indiana recalls of Lew Wallace that while the general was ambassador to Turkey he became a favorite of the lately deposed sultan. While talking with General Wallace the friend observed the latter's strict pronunciation of the word sultan, which, while in use by cultivated speakers of English, is not general. This pronunciation is "sooltan," with an almost even emphasis on syllables, or perhaps a slight accent on the last. Another word of which the general observed the oriental sound in pronunciation was harem, which he always called "hareem," accented on the reem.

When Bailey Millard, who is an old friend of David Graham Phillips, asked the author of "Joshua Craig" if he had intended to make that unconventional hero a boor, the reply was: "Oh, no! Josh does strange things, but he isn't a boor. There would be no good making him that, for women readers wouldn't go a foot with him. The women seem to understand Josh better than the men. They recognize him as a type of breezy western masculinity, bluff, headstrong, self-centered; and that is exactly what I tried to make him. Josh was easy for me to write, as I know the West and its people, and in this particular case I wanted to depict a rough, strenuous, go-ahead sort of chap—the kind one often sees in the West, and particularly in political circles. It seems to me that I have done that much, at least, but what the rest of the story is worth remains for the public to judge."

MAKING AN ASPARAGUS BED.

Prepare by Plowing or Spading Deeply, Beginning Early.

Asparagus is a perennial herb cultivated for its edible young shoots. It is a rugged plant and will thrive under adverse conditions, but to obtain the succulent stocks needed for culinary purposes well drained, rich soil is absolutely necessary. The soil should be well mixed with rotted manures containing much nitrogen and potash.

Prepare the bed by plowing or spading deeply, beginning the work early and looking after the drainage problem carefully. Plants at least one year old should be obtained for this bed. They can be raised from seed, which is sown outdoors in April in drills one foot apart, the soil being covered about one-half inch. Plants suitable for transplanting the following spring may be easily grown this way or the roots may be obtained from one to three years old.

Set the plants in the permanent bed in furrows eighteen inches apart, the plants being the same distance apart in the furrows. Be careful to spread the roots out naturally and set each plant on a little mound of earth in the furrow. Cover at first to a depth of a few inches, gradually filling in as the season advances. In the fall cut back all the stocks to a level with the ground for the winter.

In the second year loosen the soil by shallow spading. When the first shoots appear the rows may be hilled up somewhat. Cut sparingly until the third year, as the plants will be more productive afterward.

The Dutchman's Taxes.

All told, a Hollander pays about 11 per cent of his yearly income for taxes. He is taxed for his business income, for the interest he collects, on his house rent, his furniture, on six fireplaces, and on all the stoves in the house he rents or owns, on his horses, bicycle and servants. On an income of $2,400 a year he pays $293.

Don't expect to make every "scheme" go. If one in twenty "goes," you will be doing well.

Henry B. Stoy, a widely-known newspaper correspondent, died suddenly of heart disease at his home in New Albany. He was 62 years of age.

Terre Haute Shriners have received a charter for a temple. There are eighty Shriners in Terre Haute, and it is expected the temple will have 200 from nearby points, all of whom will leave Murat Temple at Indianapolis.

H. C. Peters, a former well-known business man of Liberty, is dead after a two years' illness. He came to Liberty forty-five years ago from Cincinnati, and was engaged until his retirement in the stove and tinware business. He was 77 years old. Mr. Peters held a medal for long membership in the Odd Fellows. He was also a Mason.

Miss Gladys Patton, 19 years old, died of consumption at the home of her mother, Mrs. Mary Patton, of Tipton. Although unable to attend the commencement exercises of the High School she received a diploma. She received unusually high grades in her classes, and would have received the highest honors of her class had it not been for her illness.

While a player piano in the parlor of Mrs. Harriet Miller's boarding house in Muncie was raucously playing "A Big Night, Tonight," burglars raised the rear window of the place, the noise of their movements being drowned out by the piano, and robbed the room of James Cashdollar. They carried away Cashdollar's clothing and several articles of value. The police who were notified could find no clew.

Tipton County will attempt an exhibit this year to be given by and for the farmers especially, the only part of the town people being to give the use of the streets and furnish the place in which it is to be held. The Tipton County Corn Club will conduct a corn and live stock show, lasting two and possibly three days. Attractive premiums will be offered and the show will be for Tipton County exhibitors only.

Richard Walters, 11 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Walters, of Peru, was killed instantly by electricity. He was wading in a pond of water with several other boys, when he took hold of a guy wire attached to a pole used in suspending the trolley wire of the Winona interurban line. When he fell his head rested under water, and for a time his companions thought he was playing a joke on them.

Owen Darling, the last survivor of the twenty-nine people who escaped from the burning steamer Golden Gate on the Pacific Coast at San Francisco in 1849, when the gold fever was raging, died at his home in Evansville last week at the age of 64 years. Death was caused by heart disease. Darling was one of the twenty-nine who threw their belts of gold into the sea, and this was responsible for his being saved.

John Mullen, of Darlington, the man who saved Coroner Ivory Tolly, of Lebanon, at Darlington, May 1st, will not get a Carnegie medal, because it appears that his own life was not endangered from drowning in Sugar creek, by his act of bravery. However, the agent who investigated the case said that when Mr. Mullen's four children reach the proper age, Mr. Carnegie will see that each one of them gets a college education to the value of $500.

Mrs. Lydia Clark, aged 73 years, is believed to be dying at the home of her daughter in Ft. Branch, from the effects of a fall a few days ago when she stumbled over a black cat while visiting in Princeton. She sustained a fracture of the hip, but it was thought would recover. Her age is against her, however, and for several days she has been gradually growing worse. She fell over the cat just as she opened a door to step outside, the cat running in as she started to go out.

Instinct or presence of mind of a mother cat saved a kitten from drowning at the home of S. F. Braselton, in Princeton. Mr. Braselton's family was attracted by the old cat jumping frantically again and again against the door screen. The door was finally opened and the cat then ran quickly to the well near by, came back and ran again to the well. This time it was followed, and in the well was found one of the cat's little kittens. The kitten was almost drowned, but was pulled out in a bucket and revived, the mother meantime purring and doing everything possible to enthusiastically show her gratitude.

According to the report of expert accountants who have just finished checking up ex-Sheriff Andrew J. Laramore's books at Knox, there is shown a shortage which may total $2,500. This reports fees about which there is some question of ownership. In many counties sheriffs retain the in-and-out and similar fees as their own. The Old Masters.

Europe is full of artists who, as far as line and color go, can turn admirable copies of anything. These copies are made on old canvases mounted on a framework of old wood, and when the paint is dry the picture is put through an ingenious aging process. A certain kind of varnish gives a ripe golden tone, and deepening of shadows, with a suggestion of the soil of centuries, is had by the smearing of licorice juice. As for the cracked paint surface—sure sign of age—that is obtained by baking the picture carefully in an oven or by laying a plaque of metal on the canvas and striking it gently with a hammer. Worm holes in frame or panels are merely a matter of fine shot fired in and afterward picked out. And fly specks to deceive the flies themselves may be had by the judicious spatter of india ink.

No doubt to the sure connoisseur there is something hard and cold about the copies, something vaguely unsatisfying, but no one can deny that they are enormously like the originals—so much like them that the great museums of Europe, all unsuspecting, have hung their walls with these mellow masterpieces of yesterday. It is said, for instance, that Rembrandt's portrait of Sobieski in the Louvre is not the original at all, but only a copy, the original being in Russia—Cleveland Moffett in Success.

Mother Was Present.

It was the first time in three days that Mrs. Very Rich had seen her children, so numerous were her social engagements.

"Wasn't that fortunate?" replied the little girl, "because that's your day home."—Success Magazine.

WON'T MIX.

Bad Food and Good Health Won't Mix.

The human stomach stands much abuse, but it won't return good health if you give it bad food.

If you feed right you will feel right, for proper food and a good mind is the sure road to health.

"A year ago I became much alarmed about my health, for I began to suffer after each meal no matter how little I ate," says a Denver woman.

"I lost my appetite and the very thought of food grew distasteful, with the result that I was not nourished and got weak and thin.

"My home cares were very heavy, for beside a large family of my own I have also to look out for an aged mother. There was no one to shoulder my household burdens, and come what might I must bear them, and this thought nearly drove me frantic when I realized that my health was breaking down.

"I read an article in the paper about some one with trouble just like mine being cured on Grape-Nuts food and acting on this suggestion I gave Grape-Nuts a trial. The first dish of this delicious food proved that I had struck the right thing.

"My uncomfortable feelings in stomach and brain disappeared as if by magic and in an incredibly short space of time I was again myself. Since then I have gained 12 pounds in weight through a summer of hard work and realize I am a very different woman, all due to the splendid food, Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason." Trial will prove. Read the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

SORE EYES CURED.

Eye-balls and Lids Became Terribly Inflamed—Was Unable to Go About—All Treatments Failed—Cuticura Proved Successful.

"About two years ago my eyes got in such a condition that I was unable to go about. They were terribly inflamed, both the balls and lids. I tried home remedies without relief. Then I decided to go to our family physician, but he didn't help them. Then I tried two more of our most prominent physicians, but my eyes grew continually worse. At this time a friend of mine advised me to try Cuticura Ointment, and after using it about one week my eyes were considerably improved and in two weeks they were almost well. They have never given me any trouble since and I am now sixty-five years old. I shall never fail to praise Cuticura. G. B. Halsey, Mouth of Wilson, Va., April 4, 1908."

An Old London Cookshop.

Mediaeval London, besides being a "city of taverns," was famous for its cookshops, such as the place on the river bank described by Fitzstephen in the thirteenth century: "There every day ye may call for any dish of meat, roast, fried or sodden, fish both small and great, venison and fowl. If friends come upon a sudden wearied with travel to a citizen's house and they be loath to wait for curious preparations and dressings of fresh meat let the servant run to the water side, where all things that can be desired are at hand." This particular place of public cookery apparently did an indoor as well as an outdoor trade, for Fitzstephen further described it as being used both day and night by "multitudes of soldiers or other strangers who refresh themselves to their content on roast goose, the fowl of Africa and the rare gadwit of Ionia." But what were the two last mentioned viands?—London Chronicle.

Old Settlers at Auburn

Thursday was Old Settlers' day in Auburn and DeKalb county. The day was very discouraging until the noon hour when the heavy hanging clouds were put to rout and Old Sol poked his nose out and soon dried up the rain that fell during the night and the forenoon.

At eleven o'clock the morning session opened at Henry's opera house with Giles Abbey of Waterloo, acting president, in the chair. Rev. Father Schmitz invoked divine blessing on the old settlers present and absent. The Presbyterian mixed quartette sang "Gathering Home."

Mayor G. O. Denison of this city, gave the address of welcome and no one who heard him would doubt the hospitality of our city. He turned the keys of the city over to them for he said he knew the class of people to whom he was turning them. He made a very able welcome address.

Hon. H. W. Mountz of Garrett, responded in his usual pleasing manner He felt he was a little out of place in speaking for the hoary headed fathers and mothers but gave a good account of himself. He paid a glowing tribute to the founders of our present day prosperity and happiness, without whose hardships our station in life would be much different from what it is. He gave the people a happy talk.

In the afternoon the Auburn City band was on deck early and started the program off with some good lively music It played during the afternoon while the address of the day was given by Judge Adair of Columbia City, at the opera house. A large crowd heard the elderly speaker and still the band had a large audience. Judge Adair is one of the old settlers of Whitley county, and spoke as one with authority. He was able to speak with the intelligence of the sturdy pioneers and carry them back to the days of swamps and ague. His address was very carefully prepared.

Officers were elected as follows:

G. O. Denison, president.

Isaac Gunsenhouser, vice president.

Moses B. Willis, secretary.

Thos. H. Sprott, treasurer.

A. J. Ralston, Biographer.

Mr. Ralston reported one hundred and seven deaths during the last year. This vast number was greatly missed from the rank of old settlers. The register book showed a great falling off.—Auburn Dispatch.

Didn't Say Good-bye

John Pinkerton has closed his blacksmithshop and left for parts unknown. John failed to say au revoir to his many friends. But John is an absentminded cuss anyway. In fact John's think works were not doing well at the time of departure as he forgot to pay numerous small bills which he had contracted during his stay in our beautiful city. The News man would have been real glad if John would have come in and seen us before he left. Our hearts are touched at the slight John has shown to the citizenship of St. Joe. There are several who would have made it real interesting for John had he intimated that he was going. However, John is a quiet, unassuming mortal and disliked notoriety. Perhaps the mosquitos drove John away, who knows. Good-bye John, don't stay long.

I. O. O. F.s at Hicksville

Sol Barney, J. C. Hull, W. A. G. Smith, S. L. Widney, John Bowen, J. D. Smith and wife and Rev. J. C. McCain attended the I. O. O. F. Memorial Services at Hicksville, Sunday. They report a large crowd and an excellent time. Rev. McCain made the address at the opera house to an audience of about five hundred people. Misses Grace Sechler and Ethel Berry represented the D. of R. of this place, that order participating in the decoration services. Merritt Barney and wife and Pauline also attended, taking Rev. McCain in their automobile.

Has He Found It?

It is generally believed in Washington that Commander Robert E. Perry, the arctic explorer, who left the United States last July for the artic circle, has reached the north pole. The experts base their opinion upon the fact that no word has been received from Perry since he left Etah, north Greenland, on August 17 for the dash toward the pole. They declare that if the expedition had failed and Peary had been forced to turn back he would have sent out a courier with some news. If he has been successful in reaching the goal of his ambition it is hardly probable that ne world will be appraised of the fact before the latter part of August or September. The present expedition is the best equipped that has ever gone in search of the pole, and artic explorers everywhere predict that Perry would meet with success when he left.

The Band Concert

The Coburntown band gave its first open air concert, last Saturday night. A large crowd was in attendance. They labored under difficulty and that was the light. Some move should be made toward securing a good light for this purpose, as it is very essential. Come Saturday night and enjoy yourself. A little extra money should be raised to pay someone to look after things and see that it is in shape on time.

In Memory of Samuel Johnson.

The memory of Samuel Johnson has been honored by the placing of a stained glass window in St. Clement Danes church, in London. It is near the pew wherein he used to sit. Boswell gives us a glimpse of the good man in that pew: "His behavior was, as I had imaged to myself, solemnly devout. I never shall forget the tremulous earnestness with which he pronounced the awful petition in the Litany, 'In the hour of death and in the day of judgment, good Lord deliver us.'"
